Morgenthau Arrival to Broaden Scope of Discussions.

Possibility of Rift On Project Is Seen

Executive Must Place Control in Hopkins or PWA Chief.

By Leon Dure, jr.
(Post Staff Writer).

Warm Springs, Ga., Dec. 2.—Informal discussions of relief plans for next year, which President Roosevelt has been holding over the week-end with Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, and Dr. Rexford Guy Tugwell, ranking member of the Brain Trust, will be broadened tomorrow with the arrival of two more Administration stalwarts.

Both Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., and Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes are looked for early in the morning. The presence of the former, particularly, will lend emphasis to the financial side of the relief program, at a time when various sums, startling in their magnitude to the more conservative element of the New Deal, are being mentioned.

Ickes-Hopkins Issue Arises.

The visit of Mr. Ickes likewise will have its complications for Mr. Roosevelt, it is believed, since he is seen to be faced with the ticklish problem of deciding whether the Cabinet member, who is also administrator of public works, or Mr. Hopkins will have the dominant part in administering the new program. Both are fortified with abundant plans, some of which overlap, for curtailing the relief rolls.

Already Mr. Ickes and James A. Moffett, the Federal housing administrator, have tangled over their respective ideas for promoting recovery. By his haste in composing this squabbl., the President disclosed his desire to avoid any such dissension in New Deal ranks. The lines of conflict between the outspoken Mr. Ickes and the equally vocal Mr. Hopkins, however, are even more closely drawn.

Kift Confronts Roosevelt.

The Moffett-Ickes flare-up, so quickly stamped out by the White House, was ignited by a basic disagreement in policy. The housing administrator was impressed by the danger of discouraging private building if the Government should embark on large-scale operations in this field, as proposed by the PWA administrator.

The threatening rift, which observers saw developing between Mr. Ickes and Mr. Hopkins, however, has its roots in an exactly opposite situation. They both think along parallel lines; in fact, are so closely together in plans for converting direct relief to work relief that there is imminent danger of encroachment on both sides.

Both Propose Work Relief.

In his conferences with Mr. Roosevelt, which began yesterday and were continued informally today, Mr. Hopkins has proposed a Federal Work Relief Corporation with an appropriation of $8,000,000,000 or $9,000,000,000, it is reported. This would be used for speedy extension of subsistence homesteads, low-cost housing and rural rehabilitation.

Mr. Ickes is reported en route here with a program calling for $5,000,000,000 to be spent for much the same purposes. The Secretary of Interior also has laid particular emphasis on grade-crossing elimination rural electrification and highway improvement as forms of "made work," which could be put into operation with a minimum of delay.

Oklahoma Bandsmen Injured in Bus Crash

Brownsville, Tenn., Dec. 2 (U.P.).—Eight members of the University of Oklahoma band, en route home from the Oklahoma-George Washington football game in Washington, were injured when their bus overturned 5 miles south of here today. None was critically hurt.

The driver of the bus, carrying 32 members of the band, is believed to have fallen asleep after an all-night drive and the bus left the road. The bus was one of three bearing students back to Norman, Okla.

Canadian Is Crowned As New Wheat King

Chicago, Ill., Dec. 2 (AP).—A new wheat king was crowned tonight at the Hay and Grain Show held with the International Livt Stock Exposition—and again the coveted crown of the grain kingdom rested on the brow of a Canadian—John B. Allsop, of Wembley, Alberta.

Japan Warns Against Navy Building Race

Osumi Says Tokyo Will See Any Such Move as Ill-Advised.

Tokyo, Dec. 2 (AP).—Admiral Mineo Osumi, Japan's minister of the navy, issued a warning today against foreign naval expansion after Japan's denunciation of the Washington Treaty, which is expected shortly.

"Japan," he said, "must be prepared to face with firm determination any power so ill-advised as to expand its navy in disregard of Japan's fair offers of a disarmament agreement."

He was speaking of the treatyless period possibly following upon termination of the Washington Pact.

Such a power, said Osumi, replying to interpellations in the House of Representatives, "would clearly be actuated by ulterior motives."

He said the Japanese navy, however, did not consider a naval race inevitable, because "surely no power will build beyond its real needs."

Osumi pointed out that even after Japan abrogates the Washington Treaty it will be effective for two years. During that period, he said, the powers will have time to reflect, and Japan will continue its efforts to establish some kind of naval agreement.

Kiroff Slayer Ex-Communist Party Worker

Russians Now Discount Likelihood of Wide Conspiracy.

Leningrad, U. S. S. R., Dec. 2 (AP). The assassin who shot to death Sergei Kiroff, right-hand man of Joseph Stalin, was identified today by the government as a 30-year-old Russian, formerly employed by the Workers and Peasants Inspection Bureau.

His name was given as Leonid Nicolieff. He had been employed in the Leningrad branch of the inspection service.

The announcement, made by the commissariat of home affairs, contained no statement concerning a motive or Nicolieff's political affiliations.

Plot Discounted.

His identification as a former Communist worker, however, was considered by many to minimize the possibility of a wide-laid external plot against the Soviet.

Black-bordered red flags fluttered at half-staff throughout the Soviet Union in honor of the slain Kiroff, member of the all-powerful political bureau of the Communist Party, while Communist workers were clamoring for vengeance against the assassin.

Kiroff was shot down yesterday in the Leningrad Soviet Building. Today's communique stated the

Ship Sinks With 20 In Sixth Typhoon

Philippine Gales Have Cost 400 Lives.

Manila, Dec. 2 (AP).—The sinking of a small motorship with only 11 of its crew of 31 known to have been saved today brought the toll of six typhoons which has lashed the Philippine Islands to possibly 400 lives.

The interisland motorship Pulupandan sank in Thursday's typhoon and Capt. Ramon Bello of the new 116 net ton vessel was among the missing, said information from Iloilo, home port of the ship.

With the disaster, the toll of the latest typhoon increased to 18 known dead and 70 missing.

Self-Defense Plea in Tulsa Death Scouted

Tulsa, Okla., Dec. 2 (AP).—Tulsa police scoffed today at the declaration of Philip Kennamer, 19-year-old son of a Federal judge, that he acted in self-defense in killing John P. Gorrell, 23.

"I can't accept the self-defense story at this time," said Henry B. Maddux, police criminologist. "Our investigation leads us to believe that the slaying was a result of a disagreement between two parties as to how to carry out a plan."

Kennamer, the son of Judge Franklin E. Kennamer, of the Oklahoma district, surrendered to police late Saturday.

Claims Self-Defense.

"There is little I can say except that I killed Gorrell," he said. "I did it in self-defense and I am sorry that it had to happen."

Divorces, Once Foreign To Spain, Total 6,000

Madrid, Dec. 2 (AP).—Spain, where divorce was unheard of and marriage inviolate 20 months ago, has granted an estimated 6,000 decrees since the republic's new divorce law went into effect, it was stated today in a survey published in El Diario of Madrid. Divorces have been removed from the hands of the church and placed under control of the state.

Sleep Swimmer Finds Himself in Cold River

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Arthur B. Conyers, jr., 15, colored, was considerably surprised today to wake up and find himself in the middle of the Bronx River. He struck out briskly for shore.

Police accepted the youth's explanation that he must have swum in his sleep.

Final Drive On Bolivians Is Under Way By Paraguay

Asuncion Foresees End of 3-Year War

Asuncion, Paraquay, Dec. 2 (U.P). Gen. Felix Estigarribia, field commander of the victorious Paraguayan forces in the Gran Chaco border war against Bolivia, reported today that he was ordering a general advance northward along the Pilcomayo River and that he expected the fall of Forts d'Orbigny and Cururenda. A communique said the Paraguayan troops were less than 20 miles from these forts, which block their advance on Villa Montes, field base for the Bolivian armies.

Gen. Estigarribia wired the war office he expected the forts to fall without great resistance. The Paraguayan authorities declared the Bolivian morale was broken and the men no longer were capable of making a serious stand.

Paraguay Near Villa Montes.

The Paraguayan advance guard was within 60 miles of Villa Montes, Estigarribia advised the government, ready to push on into Bolivian territory in the next offensive.

Tme general added that his men were "continuing methodically" ni pursuit of the retreating Bolivians. In Asuncion, the elated populace hoped for a smashing drive, the fall of Villa Montes this week, and an early end to the war which for three years has kept South America in turmoil.

The oil fields north of Villa Montes would be at Paraguay's mercy once that field base falls, but it was believed the presen foreign interests would not be disturbed.

Bolivia Retains Hope.

La Paz, Bolivia, Dec. 2 (U.P.).—Determination to hold Villa Montes and carry on the Gran Chaco war with Paraguay was expressed in government and military quarters tonight.

Greatest secrecy, however, surrounds details of the government's campaign plans, and the public anxiously awaited word from the front.

Newspapers in La Paz openly express the people's discontent at military setbacks in the Chaco, claiming they know who is responsible. There is no indication, however, that the Bolivians consider the border war lost.

On the contrary, the new government is composed of men of opposing political parties in one of the few coalition regimes in the nation's history, all willing to submerge local politics for the common good against Paraguay, temporarily.

This fact, coupled with the army's avowed loyalty to the new administration, indicates fuller cooperation of all forces in Bolivia for a better working war machine.

Federal Probe In Glider Death Opens at Miami

Towing Ship Pilot Thinks Eaton Attempted to Jump.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 2 (AP).—With two theories advanced, the cause of the glider accident that sent Warren E. Eaton, 46, of Norwich, N. Y., hurling 1,600 feet to his death in Biscayne Bay yesterday, remained shrouded in conjecture today.

While John R. Puckett, aeronautical inspector for the Department of Commerce, did not comment on the results of his investigation, it was known witnesses had offered the theories.

The body of Eaton, president of the Soaring Society of America and head of a large pharmaceutical company, was taken home by train last night, accompanied by his friend and pilot of the towing plane, Earl Southee, of Athens, Pa.

Southee's plane, with E. Paul duPont, of Wilmington, Del., as passenger, was towing two gliders, one piloted by Eaton, and the other with Harold Bowen, also of Norwich, at its controls, when the accident occurred.

Southee, after revealing Eaton apparently had difficulty with Cowling of the glider, said:

"I am of the opinion he must have suffered a heart attack or become nauseated and tried to jump. I kept looking for his parachute to blossom out, but it never did."

Others said Eaton's glider apparently was caught in the wake of slipstream from Southee's plane and suddenly shot upward. Then it either broke or was cut loose from the towing cable and turned over, spilling Eaton out.

Flood Waters Nearing Capital Roar Threat of Heavy Losses; Coast Guard Saves Two Boys

Spoils System Flayed in Poll On Job 'Rider'

8 Members of Congress Added to List Urging Fair Play for 900.

The "spoils system" was criticized by members of Congress who yesterday joined in the demand for repeal of the McKeller "patronage rider," which has forced 900 alcohol tax investigators to work without pay with no assurance of being paid.

Eight members added their "ayes" to the growing list of those who pledge themselves to vote for remedial legislation, while one member, the second, voted against repeal of the proviso.

Representative A. J. May (Democrat), of Kentucky, in voting "yes" added the comment: "The rider is nothing short of partisan politics and I am against it."

Opposed to "Spoils system."

Representative-elect Earl C. Michener (Republican), of Michigan, declined to take a stand until he had investigated the issue further, but he made the following voluntary observation:

"My reaction, however, is decidely 'yes.' I am opposed to the spoils system, I believe in the civil service and have been distressed during the last year and a half at the lack of respect which the present Administration seems to have for merit and civil service.

"It presume there is no question, but that I shall vote against the retention of this rider, yet I reserve the right to pass upon the whole matter when it comes up."

Plans to Make Inquiry.

A similar view was taken by Representative Louis Ludlow (Democrat), Indiana, who explained that he desired to study the facts more before committing himself.

"If it be true, as alleged, that through a political trick a large number of adherents of one political party were brought into the civil service and blanketed there, that is one thing.

"On the other hand, if it be true that through a political rider on Hundreds Lining Shore See Swift Currents Buffet Craft.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Marooned for nearly five hours on a lonely island, surrounded by swirling waters of the flood-swollen upper Potomac River, two adventurous youngsters were rescued yesterday in a dramatic life-saving demonstration by the United States Coast Guard.

While hundreds of persons lined Conduit road and the river bank about two miles above Chain Bridge, a surf boat, manned by a Coast Guard crew from the U. S. S. Dione, plunged and bounced over swift rapids to return safely from Snake Island with two very excited, but unharmed boys.

Since early morning, when their flimsy canoe was hurled against the island's rocky shore, the boys, Bert McCann, 15, of 53 I street northwest, and Eric Jones, 13, of No. 3 K street northeast, had frantically attempted to attact attention after futile attempts at self-rescue.

Residents of the cabin colony along the Maryland shore saw the boys vainly trying to navigate the river in their frail canoe. They saw the canoe dashed against the island and the boys floundering helplessly, clinging to tree limbs and grass. That was about 9 a. m. A few minutes later the Bethesda, Md., Fire Department received a call for help.

Other Treasury Financing Will Place Public Debt at $28,500,000,000.

(Associated Press.)

Approach of the winter's heavy relief load put the Government in the loan market yesterday for $900,000,000 more of the people's money.

This big pile of new cash, needed to pay the way of the emergency recovery program, was only part of a huge Treasury financing operation adding up to at least $1,892,496,500

More than half of this was refinancing of a maturing loan of $992,496,500. New issues were offered in exchange for these certificates which fall due December 15. Most are held by banks and a nearly 100 per cent conversion was forecast.

Public Debt Above 28 Billions.

Expenditure of the $900,000,000 in new funds being borrowed, together with outlay of the current Treasury working balance of $745,000,000, will push the public debt beyond $28,500,000,000, or less than $3,000,000,000 short of the $31,000,000,000 with which President Roosevelt estimated the Government would close the current fiscal year next June 30.

Undersecretary T. Jefferson Coolidge, who announced the December financing program, said the new money asked by the Treasury is expected to meet all demands until March 15—the next big financing

Zoo Keeper, Shocked at Death Of Giant Pet Orang-Utan, Dies

San Francisco, Dec. 2 (AP).—Grief and shock over the poisoning of a giant orang-utan at San Francisco's Municipal Zoo, was blamed today for the death of his keeper and the illness of the zoo superintendent.

Ginger ,the orang-utan, had the strength of many men and the gentleness of a baby. His keepers described him as the most valuable of the species in captivity, worth $5,000.

He ha da powerful sweet tooth. For a bit of candy tendered by a childish hand through his bars he would perform antics that would convulse his watchers with merriment.

Ginger knew what was going on in the monkey cages, too. He kept order among the others.

One day last week someone evidently handed Ginger a luscious morsel of candy laden with poison. The animal died.

Jack Bamberger, his keeper, died the next day. The shock of Ginger's death and the effect of the excitement upon an affected heart were set down as the cause.

Then George Bistany, noted animal tracker and zoo superintendent, who brought Ginger here from Sumatra six years ago, went to the hospital with a case of "nerves."

"Ginger was my friend," said Bistany today as he recuperated. "He saved my life once. When an ape attacked me, I called for Ginger and he gave the ape a terrible licking. He could lick 30 men.

"Bamberger, poor fellow, had been with Ginger several years. The shock was too much for him.

"I don't know what happened to me. I got very sick and seemed to drop down. The autopsy showed Ginger had been poisoned, apparently by a stick of candy.

"There are people who have a twist that they hate to see animals fed and taken care of when they themselves are not. I guess that's why Ginger was poisoned."

There won't be any more feeding of the animals by specators at Bistany's Zoo.

Peak Due Today; Houses Along Potomac May Be Inundated.

Dam Washed Out At Harrisonburg

Homes Damaged, Cattle Drowned by Swollen Shenandoah.

Flood waters from the upper Potomac and Shenandoah were rushing toward Washington last night, bringing the threat of destruction to thousands of dollars in property along the river.

Weather Bureau officials predicted the water would reach its peak late this afternoon with a repetition of the flooding of May, 1932, when the swollen Potomac washed heavy barges away from their moorings and damaged miles of shoreline property.

At Key Bridge the river was more than four feet above normal late yesterday and still rising. Flood warnings were issued by the Weather Bureau to all owners of riverfront property accessible by telephone.

Cottages Endangered.

If the Bureau's flood predictions are accurate, more than 50 summer cottages lining the Maryland side of the Potomac between the canal and the river bank will be nearly submerged.

M. W. Hayes, chief of the bureau's rivers and floods division, predicted the river in the vicinity of Glen Echo and Sycamore Island would rise to within 18 inches of the canal tow path at its peak. Water last night was washing the doorsteps of many riverfront cottages and owners were removing furniture and household equipment.

"The Potomac at Sycamore Island, which includes Glen Echo," a statement issued by Hayes said, "will rise until late Monday afternoon and reach a stage of about 15 feet. The stage at 8 a. m. Sunday was 11.1 feet.

"At Key Bridge, Washington, a stage of about 7 feet will be reached Monday afternoon. Zero is the mean low tide at Key Bridge. Below Harper's Ferry this flood will be very slightly higher than the one of May 14, 1932."

Flood Damages.

The water was piling up from the swoolen Shenandoah and its tributaries where yesterday receding floods left in their wake drowned livestock, cornfields stripped of fodder, damaged highways and damaged homes.

The city of Harrisonburg, Va., appeared to have suffered the heaviest loss. A 200-foot section of the hydro-electric dam across the Shenandoah at Three Springs was washed out, sending the flood crest down the main stream and probably saving the power house from heavy damage.

Flood waters washed away the underpinning of the Chesapeake-Western railroad bridge at Elkton, Va., and a crew of repairmen was at work last night to patch up the damage in order that service might be resumed today. Two hundred feet of Chesapeake-Western track at Keezletown and the Norfolk & Washington spur leading to mills at Lynnwood, were torn away.

Peak at Riverton.

The Shenandoah reached its peak at Riverton yesterday afternoon and State highwaymen suspended traffic across the South Fork bridge where three feet of water covered the western approach.

Six days of rain virtually isolated Waynesboro, Pa., and vicinity, flooded highways blocking travel to Baltimore, Mercersburg and other sections as the east and west

Marina Wedding Films Start Dublin Movie Riot

Dublin, Irish Free State, Dec. 2 (U.P.).—Crowds rioted in movie houses tonight when films of the wedding of the Duke of Kent to Princess Marina were shown. Rioters sang the Irish soldiers' song and shouted: "Long Live the Republic!"

Second 200-Inch Mirror Cast For Mammoth Telescopic Eye

Corning, N. Y., Dec. 2 (AP).—The second 200-inch mirror for the world's greatest telescope, the astronomical eye that will see 1,000,000 times better than a human eye, was poured without a single apparent flaw at the Corning Glass Works today.

The time was record-breaking, 6 hours 53 minutes, for 20 tons of molten glass, ladled out in 104 huge gobs that fairly scorched the faces of spectators and scientists who encircled the great pouring room. The time was nearly twice the speed of pouring the first "eye" here last March.

Officially for the first time it was announced today that the March mirror is a success. This means that if today's mirror comes out of the annealer 10 months hence in as good shape as now expected, astronomers will have two of these giant mirrors, instead of the one originally planned.

They have the money to build only one telescope. The equipment to complete a second would cost something less than the price of one battleship.

At 7:17 a. m. the first "big shot" was fired. A door of the melting turret opened and expert ladlers thrust into the furnace a long-handled iron ladle, its dipper twice the size of a washtub, its handle like a long cannon. Its weight hung from an overhead trolley.

As the ladle with 700 pounds of glass came from the furnace, Charles Wilson, head ladler, steered it to the turret covering the mirror mold. There more experts took over. They were men who knew how to dump the glass. They, under Wilson's direction, emptied the great iron dipper.

For 103 times more this ladling and pouring was repeated. At 2:10 p. m. the last ladle was poured.

Six years or so hence, this mirror, or its "spare," the March eye, will be ready to increase man's vision into space from the present 300,000,000 light years' distance to nearly one billion years. The 200-inch telescope, that is, will see light which started on its journey toward the earth 900,000,000 years ago.

The March mirror and the new one today are the property of the California Institute of Technology, which will build the 200-inch telescope with cooperation of the staff of the Mount Wilson Observatory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Borah's Blast Wins Senators' Partial Support

(Associated Press.)

Mixed reaction among Western Republicans yesterday greeted Senator Borah's proposed revolt to force a "complete reorganization" of the Republican Party's personnel and policies.

Senator Nye, of North Dakota, agreed with the Idaho independent that a quick shake-up and liberalization were needed, but he was not certain he would go so far as to call a national convention of young and liberal elements to do it independently of the Eastern conservative wing.

Senator Steiwer, of Oregon, aligned himself with that school which believes the party can attain new life through a gradual evolutionary process rather than an uprooting of old foundations.

Urges Reorganization.

Borah said in his statement Saturday night that Chairman Henry P. Fletcher of the national committee and other Easterners in control of the organization owed it to the party and its millions of supporters "to call the national committee together at once and cooperate to bring about a complete reorganization of the party organization."

The Idahoan was not ready yesterday to say whether he would personally push a move for a meeting of reorganization advocates if those in control of the party would not agree to cooperate in the project.

His proposal is tantamount to the calling of a national convention similar to the Bull Mose conclave after the Taft steam roller had flattened out the Theodore Roosevelt delegates in the Republican convention of 1912.

Borah wants to avoid a third party, his statement on this point saying:

"I want a Republican Party. Why should the millions of Republicans throughout the country give up the name, the traditions, the great record of the party simply because a few men holding positions of strategy refuse to recognize political realities."

Third Party Threatens.

Commenting on the statement yesterday, Senator Nye said:

"There is room for reorganization and the quicker it comes the better it is going to be for the party. If the party is going to survive it has got to take hold of itself and reorganize or there is going to be a third party.

"Most people prefer a new Republican Party, but if it won't permit itself to be made the vehicle of a progressive, forward-looking group, a third party is bound to come forth."

Steiwer said he did not believe it would be practicable to reorganize independently of other groups.

"I prefer to see the party work out its own salvation," he said. "I assume the next Republican convention will contain considerable new blood with marked changes in the national committee."

Steiwer, however, feels it would be a "happy thing" if Fletcher were replaced as chairman.

The belief that the party should take a revised and more liberal view of present conditions also received impetus over the week-end in a statement at Portland by Senator McNary, of Oregon, the Senate Republican leader.

While not discussing reorganization, McNary said the party should "quit its abstractions and alarms and get down to the level of human sympathy and human understandings."

Soviet Identifies Slayer of Kiroff identification was established from an examination of the slayer occupying the entire day. It was indicated Nicolieff was still being questioned.

Previously the government had limited itself to a statement that the man was "sent by the enemies of the working class;" that he had been arrested and that his identity was being investigated.

Workers Known.

In the industrial centers of the nation the grief and indignation of workers was freely manifested. Mourning meetings were held last night at Leningrad, Moscow and Kharkov industrial plants, where workers adopted resolutions urging the suppression of elements hostile to the proletarian government.

Similar meetings were held today in factories, schools and clubs throughout the U. S. S. R. Resolutions were sent to the central government urging greater activity in revealing all class enemies.

Kiroff's funeral will be held December 6 in Moscow, where his ashes will be buried under the wall of the Kremlin, near Lenin's tomb.

Between You and Me

Broad Views of U. S. Supreme Court Deflect Attacks of Politicians and Agitators.

By Raymond Clapper

ONE of the curious phenomena of the New Deal era is the absence of attack on the Supreme Court.

The court has had to take some rough gaffing in previous periods of social upheaval.

Populists in the Nineties denounced the court for throwing out the first income tax law.

Theodore Roosevelt Progressives of 1910-12 proposed recall of judicial decisions for lower courts and most of them eyed the Supreme Court with suspicion. The popular conception of that day was that the court consisted of a row of retired corporation lawyers who had consecrated themselves to distorting the due process clause—originally designed to protect human rights—into a Magna Charta for rugged individualists or, as they were then known, "the predatory interests."

Even in the twenties when the elder LaFollette made his try for the Presidency, the court was under attack. The LaFollettes proposed that the court be deprived of its authority to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional, asserting that this authority was not granted by the Constitution, but was usurped by John Marshall, the first Chief Justice of the United States. It was never clear what they proposed to do in the event that the court declared such action unconstitutional.

Sporadic sniping continued down to the time Charles E. Hughes became chief justice. His confirmation was preceded by a bitter fight against his confirmation, led by Senators Borah and Norris. They lost that fight, but a short time thereafter succeeded in rejecting the nomination of John J. Parker to be Associate Justice on the ground that he was hostile to labor, harbored prejudice against the Negroes, and was too conservative in his economic views generally.

Those two demonstrations by the Senate progressives stirred up a new ferment. When it became apparent that Franklin D. Roosevelt was going into the White House, the progressives began to talk of enlarging the court so that it could be packed with additional justices who would be friendly to the liberal program which Mr. Roosevelt was about to project.

Mr. Roosevelt himself gave a mild cue when in his campaign speech at Baltimore, he said in effect the Republican Party had even annexed the Supreme Court. The remark popped out extemporaneously as an afterthought and Mr. Roosevelt was more careful thereafter.

Meantime Mr. Hoover had appointed Benjamin N. Cardozo to the vacancy created by the retirement of Oliver Wendell Holmes. Justice Cardozo was famed as a scholar in the law and an heir to the liberal tradition of Holmes. That appointment brought universal acclaim, and the progressives were loudest of all in their cheers. Even Senator Borah was satisfied.

Furthermore Chief Justice Hughes, whose nomination had been opposed on the ground that he was a corporation lawyer, sided in several decisions with the liberal wing of the court headed by Brandeis. Those who had opposed him soon began to appear a little ridiculous. Some of them suspected he did it deliberately to confound them.

Then early this year came the court's decision upholding the Minnesota mortgage moratorium act with Hughes and Owen J. Roberts joining the Brandeis-Stone-Cardozo wing in approving this State debtor relief statute. Soon thereafter the same line-up certified the legitimacy of the New York milk statute carrying price-fixing powers. In both of these decisions, while they concerned State rather than Federal statutes, the court took a general position in favor of exercise of State power over private contract where necessary for the public interest. New Dealers were much heartened by these decisions which indicated to them that the court would not approach the Roosevelt recovery measures in a hostile state of mind.

This feeling also was strengthened by the fact that recently the court agreed to review the conviction of Tom Mooney.

It is this confidence which in large part accounts for the fact that the court has been free from attack during the current period of upheaval and change.

Honors are even between Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and President Henry I. Harriman of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

When Harriman recently learned that Secretary Wallace favored stimulation of private expenditures through such campaigns as that of the Housing Administration rather than depending entirely on public spending, he said approvingly that Wallace was a "right winger."

When Wallace heard of this he said: "I return the compliment and say that Mr. Harriman is one of the most advanced among the left wingers of the Chamber."

As a matter of fact they worked closely together in drafting the AAA program. Harriman was one of the first advocates of the domestic allotment plan upon which it was based. He felt that anything that would increase farm buying power would be good for business.

Paris Veterans Stage New Protest March

The veterans defied decrees against demonstrations and marched along the principal boulevards of the city. Police established lines and headed the marchers off. The veterans dispersed, shouting their protests.

Father, 73, Stomped To Death; Barber Held

Denver, Dec. 2 (AP).—Accused of causing his 73-year-old father's death by stamping on the elderly man's abdomen, Charles Wassinger, 50-year-old Denver barber, was held in jail tonight. The elder Wassinger died today after his injury last night.

"The old man was trying to me out of my barber shop," Detective Lawrence Cook quoted the younger Wassinger as saying.

U. S. to Borrow $900,000,000 To Help Relief

New Treasury Financing Will Make Public Debt $28,500,000,000.

Bonds and Notes Offered.

The Treasury offered for cash $450,000,000 in 15-18 3⅛ per cent bonds, dated December 15 and maturing December 15, 1952, but callable after December 15, 1949.

It offered also for cash $450,000,000 in 18-month 1⅛ per cent notes, dated December 15 and maturing June 15, 1936.

Two conversion offers were made to holders of the $992,496,500 in 2¼ certificates maturing December 15. Secretary Morgenthau reserved the right to increase the $450,000,000 issue of 18-month notes by whatever amount exchange bids were tendered by owners of the maturing certificates. He also offered these same holders the option of making their exchange bids on an undetermined conversion offering of 2½ per cent notes dated December 15 and maturing June 15, 1939. These 4½-year notes will form part of the same series issued last June.

Coolidge said the December operation will wind up present Treasury financing plans until March, so far as new money is concerned. On March 15 there is a maturity of $528,101,600 in 2½ per cent notes. Meanwhile, the Administration is studying methods of refinancing $1,870,000,000 in 4¼ per cent fourth Liberty bonds called for payment next April 15.

Cash Balance $1,602,000,000.

The Treasury's present cash balance is $1,602,000,000, but this amount includes $809,000,000 or profit on gold dollar devaluation and $47,000,000 of seigniorage on silver coinage—both sums which are held segregated from the "working balance" of $745,000,000 out of which day-by-day bills are met.

The new borrowing will push this "working balance" above $1,600,000,000, which the Treasury apparently believes ample for the three months between December 15 and March 15.

If last year was any indication, January may again put the heaviest drain on Government cash coffers. In that month of 1934 the Government spent $950,000,000, the highest single monthly figure reached during Mr. Roosevelt's administration.

So far this fiscal year since July 1, monthly expenditures of the Treasury have averaged just above $500,000,000.

Self-Defense Plea In Killing Rejected

Thursday night. Kennamer said he surrendered because he feared that another person would be charged with the killing.

Floyd J. Huff, Kansas City airplane pilot, retold in a signed statement here today the story he had given Kansas City police shortly before Kennamer surrendered. Huff declared he drove Kennamer from Kansas City to Tulsa the night of November 21 and heard the prisoner tell more than a week in advance the exact manner in which Gorrell, student at a Kansas City dental college, would die.

Huff said he had lacked credence in the story because Kennamer appeared to have been drinking.

Kennamer, charged with first degree murder, will be arraigned tomorrow.

Knew Nothing of Plot.

Wilcox and his daughter said they knew nothing of any plot against them, and Wilcox asserted he recalled no reason Kennamer should champion their cause.

"He and Virginia never were close friends," Wilcox said of Kennamer. "I doubt if they ever had as many as two dates, although they met frequently at parties. They were members of the same social group here."

The disclosure that he had been "shadowed" by Kennamer Saturday only a few hours before the judge's son surrendered came from Richard T. Oliver, roommate of Gorrel at a Kansas City dental college.

Appeals for Aid.

Oliver, who started for Tulsa Friday night while the killing of Gorrell was still a mystery, reported Kennamer boarded his train 60 miles from here. The aspiring dentist, fearful, appealed to the conductor, who placed him in a private apartment.

Oliver identified Kennamer as a youth he had known as "Wilson."

Gorrell was quoted by Oliver as expressing concern over a telephone call from Tulsa concerning some slot machines Gorrell owned, and as saying:

"If ever I am murdered or wounded, remember that Wilson will be the man."

Gorrell was slain last Thursday night in his motor car. The young man, home for a Thanksgiving holiday, was found shot to death with his pistol returned to its holster. Police, asserting it would have been impossible for Gorrell to kill himself and return the revolver, started an immediate inquiry.

Women Cause Arrest Of Ex-Prince Charming

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Duncan Dunscomb, with a distinguished air, a well-filled address book and a detective, arrived today from Philadelphia to answer a grand larceny charge.

Miss Eva Daniels, 30, who said she lost four diamond rings valued at $900, filed the charge and also called police when she spied Dunscomb buying an overcoat in a Philadelphia shop. New York police said a half dozen other alleged women victims had identified his photograph as the man they once thought charming.

"'T was tugwell and the nira codes

'All fera were the new tax loads:
'Just Greek to common folk."

Alice, you remember, couldn't make head nor tail out of "Jabberwocky" until she held it up to a mirror. Then it became perfectly legible . . . just like alphabet soup.

That's the trouble with the Washington political Wonderland. It has to be explained. The armchair, dinner table Explainers do such a poor job of it, because it was explained to them only last week.

But The Washington Post has a little mirror to reflect the passing political show so that you can understand why the Bumpstead Bill was thrown out the window and why Lame Duck Senator Sorehead was given a crutch. Better still, this little mirror tells you Who Said What and Why during those fateful hours before the reporters arrived on the scene.

This magic mirror is The Post's column, "Between You and Me," and the chief mirror polisher is, of course, none other than Raymond Clapper, that famous newspaperman who cut his eyeteeth on a portable typewriter and who has covered more political affairs than the shadow of Sir Basil Zaharoff. Clapper knows Washington so well that he could be blindfolded and still find his way to any given office in the Department of Commerce Building; but, of course, he isn't blindfolded. He keeps his eyes and ears open and he sees and hears more than a Censor at a burlesque show.

Clapper covered his first National political convention in 1920. He yawned through the 1924 Democratic Walkathon while Alabama was casting those 24 votes for Oscar W. Underwood. In 1928 and 1932 he was again in the Press Box, and he reported the 1930 Naval Conference in London when American diplomats sank battleships to please Europe and European statesmen sank putts to please themselves. His book, "Racketeering in Washington," an expose of Nepotism, made a certain Congressman fire six relatives in one afternoon. He has traveled more than 10,000 miles this year to learn the state of the Nation. He covered the San Francisco general strike, and he forecast the nomination of Upton Sinclair. For years, he was chief of the United Press' Washington Bureau. His by-line is world famous.

"Between You and Me" is required reading for the Man-Who-Must-Know. Clear, accurate, interpretative, Raymond Clapper's column gives you the Low Down on the Higher-ups, the running account of the New Deal, the back-stage scenes of the political Show-shop. Read "Between You and Me" each morning in

Arms Cut Is Included in Proposal of Harris Foundation.

Chicago, Dec. 2 (AP).—Twenty proposals for "a constructive American foreign policy" looking toward international tranquility were advanced by the Norman Waite Harris Foundation today. The foundation, created in 1923 "for the promotion of a better understanding on the part of American citizens of other peoples of the world" proffered the following in brief:

1. Development of the ideas expressed in the (Kellogg-Briand) peace pact of Paris.
2. Renunciation of use of armed forces except in response to an act of war or proof of a violation of a disarmament arrangement.
3. Limitation of armaments.
4. International control of the traffic and manufacture of arms.
5. An efficient procedure for quick consultation in cases of violation of the Paris treaty.
6. Non-recognition by Paris treaty signatories of status quo governments resulting from violence.
7. Abstention from hostilities on the part of Paris treaty signers and compliance with consultant arrangements.
8. Support of neutral states for action taken against states engaging in hostilities.
9. Continuation of the policy of bilateral and regional arbitration and conciliation treaties.
10. Participation by the family of nations in reconsidering inapplicable treaties.
11. Continued American participation in Pan-American, Far Eastern and certain world conferences.
12. Avoidance of tariffs, etc., which impose unfair burdens on some countries.
13. Definition of the responsibilities of states toward nationals.
14. Renunciation of imperialism.
15. Flexible economic policy.
16. Avoidance of non-reciprocal international economic relations.
17. Maintenance of the Monroe Doctrine.
18. Maintenance of the open door in China.
19. More authority for the President in arms embargoes, settlement of debts, etc.
20. Increased appropriations for the Department of State.

When Whaleback Piled Upon Muskegon Rocks

Driven into the rocky breakwater at Muskegon, Mich., Friday, the Henry Cort, whaleback freighter, was held fast while high waves beat back Coast Guard rescue attempts for many hours. The entire crew of 25 was saved Saturday after one rescuer's life had been lost.

Associated Press Photos.

After hope had been abandoned, rescuers finally succeeded in saving the crew of the Henry Cort. The freighter had been tossed into the breakwater by a 60-mile gale that whipped Lake Michigan into one of the worst storms in many years. The crew, shown above, wrapped in blankets, are waiting for their clothes to dry.

Hitler Envoy Seeks to Quiet French Fears

German Tells Laval That Reich's Intentions Are Not Belligerent.

Paris, Dec. 2 (AP).—Joachim von Ribbentrop, Chancellor Hitler's personal representative, had a 40-minute talk with Foreign Minister Pierre Laval today during which he tried to appease French fears of Germany's rearmament. Von Ribbentrop insisted that Germany was misunderstood, declaring she simply sought equality of rights with other nations as a symbol of her dignity and not with bellicose intentions.

The German envoy, who recently visited London and talked with Undersecretary of Foreign Affairs Eden in an effort to lessen the tension aroused in European chancelleries, also discussed with Laval his recent speech before the chamber of deputies in which Laval announced France's sympathetic attitude toward the American arms control proposals.

Today's interview was arranged at the request of the German ambassador. Von Ribbentrop's movements in Paris during the last two days had been kept secret. He appeared at the foreign office during the afternoon and left immediately after his conversations with Laval.

It was stressed in informed French circles that Von Ribbentrop's visit was purely private and that consequently he was not to be regarded as a negotiator but as simply on a mission of information.

It was stated that the German representative and Laval made a general examination of Franco-German problems, discussing among other things the invitation to Germany to support France's eastern Locarno act.

The German's appearance in Paris coincided with efforts to get the support of French war veterans for negotiatoins intended to smooth out Franco-German relations. Chancellor Hitler's recent appeal to French veterans to believe in his sincerity and his desire for pease was reiterated in talks Von Ribbentrop had here with other French statesmen and deputies.

Unable to Pierce Clouds, Post Returns to Base

Bartlesville, Okla., Dec. 2 (AP).—Wiley Post, Oklahoma aviator who twice flew around the world, postponed his projected stratospheric flight today after 40 minutes in the air.

Post reported he attained an altitude of 12,000 to 15,000 feet as he tried to find openings in the broken clouds that covered this region. Failing to find a clear spot in which to attempt an ascent to 50,000 feet and a new altitude record, he decided to return to the airport rather than take a chance.

Realty Investigation At Chicago to Resume

Chicago, Dec. 2 (AP).—Hearings on real estate reorganizations, which Representative A. J. Sabath said already have uncovered evidences of a "Nation-wide racket," will be resumed here Tuesday by the Investigating Committee which Sabath heads.

The committee then will draft suggested Federal legislation aimed at regulating the operations of real estate bond holders' protective committees.

Akron Awaits Rubber Union Election Friday

A. F. of L. Expects Its First Major Triumph in Long Struggle.

Akron, Ohio, Dec. 2 (AP).—Thousands of Akron Union Workers are expecting to give the American Federation of Labor this week its first major victory in the long struggle to unionize the vast rubber industry.

The opportunity lies in collective bargaining elections scheduled to be held Friday in the plants of the B. F. Goodrich Co., and the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

"We'll win easily," union officials say. "We have 7,000 members out of the approximately 12,000 employes at the Goodrich plants, and 6,000 out of 9,000 at Firestone."

H. H. Atkinson, financial secretary of the Firestone local, said many nonunion employes also will vote for union representation in collective bargaining.

There is the possibility that stout resistance by the companies may succeed in forcing a long postponement. J. W. Thomas, president of Firestone, was quoted several days ago as saying there was no necessity for the bargaining elections, and that the matter wouldn't be settled "until it reaches a court of last resort."

J. D. Tew, president of Goodrich, has said that the program was "not in the public's interest."

The effort of the A. F. of L. to unionize the rubber industry goes back over several years with scarcely any success until recently when the India Tire & Rubber Co. went all-union, and the General Tire & Rubber Co. signed a union contract.

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Gertrude Stein is among Gertrude Stein's favorite authors, it developed today.

Replying to the New York Herald Tribune's poll of authors' views on recent books, she mentioned three she liked, including "my own 'Portraits and Prayers.'"

U. S. Home Aid Giving Virginia New Villages Near Park Area

Richmond, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.). "New villages are springing up around the Shenandoah National Park area in Virginia," according to an article in the December Commonwealth magazine of the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce, "villages designed to bring a new era to the mountain folk whose old homes are to become a part of the national park." For these "economically lost" Virginians, whose financial security once lay in the reaping of the chestnut harvest in the vast forests which covered the mountain tops and were wiped out by the blight, Uncle Sam has planned a new life, a life regulated and normal, the accepted American formula of living.

"In the park area, all of which was purchased by Virginia and given to the Federal Government, lived 465 families, approximately 2,300 individuals. All were required to move by the United States Park Service, but recently some have been allowed to stay and others, who can not find quarters, have been given short-term leases until spring.

"Of the 465 families officials of the Division of Subsistence Homesteads recently stated that 350 are anxious to take advantage of the subsistence homestead plan whereby the Government builds and equips small home-farms, for which it is to be repaid over a period of years by the purchaser. However, of this group only 200 families appeared economically able to purchase homesteads according to the usual terms. The remaining 150 families were in a less fortunate position. Accordingly the division and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration joined forces. The division has allocated $31,000 as its share of the required capital and the Emergency Relief Administration has furnished $150,000.

"If present plans are carried out, homesteads are to be established in from three to five communities adjacent to the park and so distributed that homesteaders may live in the same counties in which their present homes are located. The cost of the complete homestead will be between $1,050 and $1,550.

"Each will comprise a house, simple but well built and attractively designed, with a barn and other necessary outbuildings. Individual tracts of land will range between 8 and 15 acres, the average being 10. With the homestead will go a good milk cow, two dozen chickens, two shoats, essential tools and equipment, seeds and fertilizer. In each community a community building and workshop will be erected, the cost to be prorated among the homesteads."

3 Slayings, Suicide Are Laid to Jealousy

Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 2 (AP).—Jealousy was the motive assigned by police today for a triple slaying and suicide in the downtown apartment of Mrs. Minnie Frary, 60, last night.

They said that Chares T. Ritchie, 60, a former detective, shot and killed Mrs. Frary, Theron W. Carpenter and David L. Thomas, each 40, then took his own life.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

By Ralph Robey.

Little, if any, progress was made last week in the drive for recovery through a policy of cooperation between the Government and business leaders. This was largely the result of the activities of Administration members. Through their continued discussion of plans for spending billions of dollars they have renewed fears about the willingness of the Administration to give private business an opportunity to improve by itself. It would be too strong to say that as yet there has been an appreciable net loss of confidence on the outlook, but there appears to be little reason to believe that last week witnessed a continuation of the recent growth of hope that we now are faced with sound, steady improvement.

Business itself last week held up fairly well. The steel industry moved further on the upward trend, the rate of operations being 28.1 per cent of capacity, as against 27.6 per cent the previous week. These figures, it is important to note, too, are not correct for seasonal variations. In consequence the improvement is more than the .5 per cent indicated, for the usual trend at this time of year is downward.

Electric power output also continued its recent upward trend. Total production last week was up almost 1 per cent above a week earlier and over 6 per cent above a year ago.

Freight /carloadings suffered a bad decline, dropping almost 4 per cent from the previous week and to more than 4 per cent below a year earlier. This showing was substantially worse than expected. The commercial loans of reporting member banks also continued to decline—the drop as of November 21, the last date available, being $19,000,000.

Unfavorable Factors Still Largely Overlooked.

These relatively unfavorable business developments, nevertheless, played a comparatively small part in such slackening of the growth of optimism as took place. Business curves almost never move forward in an unbroken line and consequently a decline of a week or two is not regarded as significant. The important feature of such curves is the general trend. For several weeks that trend has been toward improvement. Needless to say this does not provide assurance that the betterment will continue, but as yet such declines as have taken place do not provide striking evidence that the general upward movement has been stopped. Were there no extraneous factors in the outlook, accordingly, it is reasonable to assume that the conviction of steady recovery from here on, which has been so evident in recent weeks, would continue to dominate the outlook.

With such extraneous factors as have been coming to the surface in the last two weeks, nevertheless, the immediate showing of business indicators tends to be driven into the background in an appraisal of the outlook. For during the past two weeks the whole question has been reopened of whether business is to have a free rein for a considerable time, in order to "test" whether it can move ahead under its own power. It has been reopened on the one side by Secretary Ickes with his low-cost housing project, and on the other side by Relief Administrator Hopkins in his insistence that the unemployment problem must be solved by a program of governmentally financed projects.

Programs Have Different Bases of Logic.

Superficially it may appear that these two proposals go hand in hand. In other words it may appear that their great difference rests only in the line of reasoning that gives rise to them. Thus, Secretary Ickes apparently advanced his plan because of a belief that private business will not pick up of its own accord and consequently it is necessary for the Government to step in with still heavier expenditures if continued business improvement is to be assured. Mr. Hopkins, on the other hand, apparently approached the problem purely from the point of view of relief. He is vigorously opposed to the dole and consequently is driven to the alternative of suggesting that the unemployed must be cared for through a Government building program. This is true even though he anticipates a slow, gradual improvement of business in the next few months, because even with the best of conditions there will remain a heavy relief burden this winter.

These differences, however, are merely the surface factors involved. Of far more importance is the effect the two proposals would have on the economic system. In this particular the two plans are widely apart. If the plan of Secretary Ickes were followed, for example, it would mean that the Government would enter into direct competition with private business in the real estate field. Through throwing on the market such houses as he proposes, real estate values would be undermined from one end of the country to the other. With this would go a weakening of the position of savings banks and insurance companies, because of the large proportion of their assets invested in mortgages. Further, such a program would put an end to private residential building, would destroy the work done in coming to the aid of hard-pressed real estate debtors through the Home Owners Loan Corporation, and would bring the operations of the Federal Housing Administration to a sharp halt.

Hopkins Plan Much Like The CWA Last Year.

The plan of Mr. Hopkins, by contrast, would involve less direct attack upon any single phase of private business and its results would not necessarily have such a devastating effect upon existing values. Probably his is the reason that it is said that it will not come into competition with private business. It will not come into competition in the sense that the Government undertakes to produce something and throw it on the market at substantially below existing prices or below the price at which it can be offered by private capital. It must be obvious, nevertheless, that there is still much other room for competition and consequently the proposal can be interpreted as "noncompetitive" only in a narrow sense.

If, for example, the Government, in such a spending program as suggested by Mr. Hopkins, employs labor at a wage above the existing level in the locality concerned, it quite definitely is "competing" with private employers. The same may be true in the hours of labor, and in the intensity of labor. In the old CWA there was competition on all of these points with the result that not only did we waste enormous sums of money, but as well made the relief burden heavier than it need have been. So far we have no assurance that this record will not be repeated. On the contrary there is reason to expect that it will be because the plan as outlined differs in no essential particulars from the plan originally announced as CWA.

Such Spending Means Still More Uncertainty.

Along with these objections to the plan of Mr. Hopkins must be placed another that is even more important from the point of view of the outlook for business. This is the question of the evidence it provides of the unwillingness of the Administration to put its financial house in order. It means that the Administration refuses to concede that the expenditures of the past 18 months have not started us on the road to recovery and consequently that it now is time to move toward a balanced budget. It means that Washington still is determined to try to spend our way to prosperity. It means, in a word, that the theat of national bankruptcy remains a live issue.

Granting the Administration goes ahead with a $5,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 spending program, therefore, and regardless of how it is verbally decorated, one may look for some impetus to those sections of the economy that benefit directly from such outlays, but the rest of the economy will remain relatively stagnant. And a year from now we shall still have the problem of whether further pump-priming is not necessary if a period of bad business is to be prevented.

Cotton Futures Turn Active; Prices Higher

Offerings Are Absorbed on Moderate Drops; May Up to 12.62.

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Trading in cotton futures here showed somewhat increased activity during the past week with prices slowly but steadily advancing until May deliveries sold at 12.75 just before the Thanksgiving Day adjournment.

This represented an advance of approximately $3.35 per bale from the low price touched at the beginning of the month, which was sufficient to attract some realizing, and reactionary sentiment was promoted by a decline in Liverpool over our holiday.

Offerings were absorbed on moderate declines by a continued demand from the trade and scattering support from commission house sources, however, with May closing in the week-end at 12.63 compared with 12.42 at the close of the previous week.

The attention of the trade at the beginning of the week was focused on the evening up of December commitments, incident to the circulation of the first delivery notices. These amounted to about 14,400 bales, and brought out some further liquidation which was absorbed by the trade at a slight widening of the difference.

The market, apparently, had been fairly well prepared by previous Washington press advices, for the voluntary acreage curtailment program formally announced by the Secretary of Agriculture after the close of business here on Wednesday.

Traders now are awaiting the outcome of the referendum on the Bankhead act which is scheduled for December 14.

Fowler McCormick Elected.

Chicago, Dec. 2 (AP).—Fowler McCormick has been elected a vice president of the International Harvester Co., the firm his grandfather, Cyrus McCormick, founded. He will have charge of foreign sales for the company.

Security Price Trends Still Point Upward

Heavy November Trading Drives Turnover Up to 21,000,000 Shares.

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Security markets this week put a few finishing touches on the November record of rising prices, then settled down to take things easy around the Thanksgiving holiday.

Trends in financial markets, as well as in business, continued slowly upward. Curves of business activity lengthened their gains over 1933 a little.

Impressions of slow economic recuperation were strengthened by a succession of extra and increased dividends. The November dividend score was the best in several years. Bullish response was tempered by the assumption some payment may have been influenced by fears of taxes on corporation surpluses.

Stocks and Bonds.

Both stock and bond markets reflected an urge to invest some of the pool of unused capital, swollen by increased dividend payments, gold from Europe and some large bond calls.

Preferred shares and other income-producers were in best demand in the share list. Bonds crept ahead to around the peak levels attained last July.

Improvement in rail and industrial shares encouraged bulls to hold their position in stocks. But the November advance had gone far enough to tempt some profit-taking, especially in the faster-moving industrials.

Turnover in November.

The November turnover, approximating 21,000,000 shares, was the largest since July. The expansion in trading accompanied an uptrend in prices, in contrast with the July decline.

Motors, motor accessories, steel and various industrial specialties in the share list were favored in the buying for business prospects.

While the motor industry is just getting under way on production of 1935 models, the steel industry attained an operating rate of 29 per cent of capacity, Iron Age estimated. Leading steel producers, however, still were some distance from a profitable basis.

Other business barometers registered modest gains. Electric power output was the highest since January, 1931, but the weekly increase was seasonal. Carloadings declined about the seasonal amount. Retail trade observers reported Christmas buying is coming in to take up a warm-weather slack.

More confidence was expressed in banking quarters in the ability of the European gold countries to maintain their present positions.

Wool Futures Hold Firm in Week's Market

New York, Dec. 2.—Prices of wool top futures on the New York Wool Top Exchange held firm during the past week. At the close of the market on Friday, prices were unchanged to up 6 points on the nearby contracts, and off 2 to up 2 points on the more distant months. Trading during the week, for the most part, was rather quiet. The spot price of the Exchange Standard Certificated Top advanced 10 points, from 83.0 to 84.0 cents.

Futures in foreign markets showed a slight advance from the closing level of the previous week. At Antwerp, prices were up an eighth of a penny on all active contracts, while at Roubaix, they were unchanged to up 10 centimes. Bradford spot quotations were off one-half to a penny on the better grades of top and unchanged to off half a penny on the lower grades.

Sugar Futures Up In Active Trading

New Buying Is Reported; Higher Raws Bring Out Covering.

New York, Dec. 2.—Sugar futures enjoyed an active week and registered net gains of 1 to 4 points. An active and higher raw market brought out covering which was met with further hedgings for producers. Sentiment was better and new buying was reported. In the raw market about 30,000 to 40,000 tons were believed sold for prompt shipment from Cuba, but for January use, at 1.65 cents.

This was early in the week and later a sale to a Southern refiner was made at 1.75 cents and it was thought further sales to local refiners had been consummated at 1.70 cents. Refiners appeared little interested in, "combination" offers for December—January use Cubas at 2.18½-1.85 cents and it was thought they had pretty well filled their needs to the end of the year.

It is also possible for them to use in December part or all of the sugars bought for January use by paying the 2.18½ cents price. A lot of Philippine sugars for January use sold at 2.55 cents (1.65 cents c. & f. basis). United States consumption figures for ten months to October 31, showed a loss of 1.69 per cent under last year's period.

Ban on Clerical Garb Protested in Turkey

Ankara, Turkey, Dec. 2 (AP).—The Turkish government's decree forbidding clergymen of all denominations to wear a clerical attire in public has created dissatisfaction which became noticeable today in Greek, French and Italian political circles.

In these quarters the measure was said to be considered an overthrow of historic secular traditions concerning priests. It was understood the three governments were planning to make amicable representations to the Turkish government.

Hawaii Finds 1934 Budget Will Balance

Territory Expects to Pile Up Surplus by End of 1937 Fiscal Year.

Honolulu, Hawaii, Dec. 2.—The Territory of Hawaii has balanced its budget. During the next biennium of June 30, 1935 to June 30, 1937 it should have a surplus of $2,230,382.00, according to figures submitted by James W. Lloyd, director of the budget, and J. W. Vannatta, deputy territorial auditor, to the governor's tax committee.

The estimated receipts to be derived from general property taxes, special taxes, poll taxes and license taxes, total $21,349,047.70, while the estimated minimum requirements have been placed at $19,118,664.77.

While at this time the territory seems ahead of many other parts of the United States in forecasting a balanced budget for next biennium, it nevertheless [illegible] a deficit of $1,090,000 at the [illegible] of the present biennium, unless more tax monies can be raised. To this end the governor's committee is working upon recommendations to the Territorial legislature, which meets in February.

As far as the Territory's payments to the U. S. Federal Treasury is concerned it was recently divulged here that Hawaii, living up to her status as an integral part of the Union, paid more revenue to Uncle Sam last year than 16 of her sister States.

100 Stocks Gain 9.3 Per Cent In November

Appraisal at End of Month Is Highest Since June, Survey Shows.

New York, Dec. 2.—The market value of 100 representative common stocks increased $1,115,750,000, or 9.3 per cent, in November, to $13,195,563,000 at the end of the month, according to the monthly compilation of Frazier Jelke & Co.

The market appraisal at the end of the month was the highest since the end of June, when these stocks were appraised in the market at $13,492,119,000.

The same stocks dropped 3.7 per cent in October; advanced 2-100 of 1 per cent in September, and rose 5.2 per cent in August. Values declined 11.6 per cent in July; 8.5 per cent in June, and 3.5 per cent in May.

In October 12 of the 13 sub-groups constituting the index advanced, and one, the utilities, declined. The decrease in the utilities was $13,822,000, or 1.6 per cent. The largest gain in dollars was $236,993,000 in the motors.

The oils advanced $168,962,000; the miscellaneous industrials, $116,982,000, and the electrical equipments, $113,478,000.

On a percentage basis the largest gain in November was 23 per cent in the steels. The railroad equipments advanced 17.1 per cent; the electrical manufacturing issues, 17 per cent; the building shares, 16.6 per cent; the motors, 15.6 per cent; the miscellaneous industrials, 11.1 per cent; the foods, 9.1 per cent; the merchandising shares, 8.8 per cent; the chemicals, 8.6 per cent; the oils, 6.6 per cent; the rails, 5.7 per cent, and the mines, 2.7 per cent.

Trading in Coffee Sets High Record

Heaviest Turnover Since July, 1933, Laid to Covering.

New York, Dec. 2.—The coffee futures market started the week with the heaviest day's trading since July, 1933, occasioned by heavy covering by trade interests and December liquidation and switching on the part of commission house customers. Although trading slackened toward the end of the week a firm tone was maintained. Santos contracts ended with net gains of 22 points for December and 6 to 9 higher for the balance. Rio contracts were 1 to 4 points net higher.

The first December notices issued were stopped by the trade and the steadiness particularly in the spot month was attributed to the desire of trade interests to retain actual coffees if possible rather than lose them through delivery against notices. Brazilian futures and cost and freight offers were steady and it was reported that a bullish sentiment prevailed there, despite a dull market, as a result of continued reports of poor next crop prospects. Fluctuation in the Brazilian dollar exchange rate held to narrow limits during the week.

Spot prices continued steady although business done was reported disappointing. Santos 4's were still quoted at 11-11¼ cents. "Mild" grades in the local spot market held steady. They are being watched carefully for the trade expects that future weakness in the market may start at this source if any.

Trade Outlook Brightens for 1935 Program

Extra-Seasonal Upswing in Industries Is Aid to Revival.

New York, Dec. 2.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co., of New York, currently comments as follows:

"Efforts of the Administration to coordinate its various undertakings have thus far been only partially successful, but business sentiment has been improved by further indications of constructive planning for 1935.

"While the deliberations of Congress will introduce new uncertainties early in January, present indications are that the moderate extra-seasonal upswing in industrial activity in the past two months marks the beginning of a forward move which is likely to continue through the spring months.

Confidence Called Shaky.

"Confidence in certain phases of the Administration program is still very shaky, however, and final determination of its plans for unemployment relief, for the stimulation of building, and for labor legislation will be awaited before extensive forward commitments are undertaken in most lines.

"Developments affecting the 1935 prospects for the building and automobile industries are being watched closely at this time because of the dominating position of these two major industries as consumers of raw materials and as employers of labor.

"Leading automobile producers now are completing preparations for the launching of aggressive production schedules on new lines shortly after the turn of the year, and plant activities of some companies are likely to turn upward within the next two or three weeks.

Increase in Outputs.

"Conservative forecasts of probable 1935 production totals in this industry point to a 10 to 20 per cent increase in outputs over 1934.

"In the building industry also, activity is expected to expand materially next year. Not only are further large Federal appropriations for public works expected, but private capital is to be encouraged and aided to undertake long postponed construction enterprises. Administration plans in this respect are now in process of formulation and it is expected that a coordinated plan to expand activity will be announced before the close of the year.

"Taking a broad view of the business outlook, recent trends have followed rather closely earlier indications this fall that efforts of the Administration to reassure business would probably prove at least partially effective toward the close of the year in spite of further belligerent moves on the part of union labor and of numerous radical proposals for reckless Government spending."

On the Air Today

By George M. Adams, Jr.

THE unusual situation of two rival stations, managed by the same person and operated under the same roof, will become a reality today when N. B. C. opens KYW, its new Philadelphia outlet, with studios located in the WCAU building, C. B. S.'s Philadelphia outlet.

KYW, formerly located in Chicago, will henceforth be directed by Dr. Leon Levy, general manager of the Philadelphia Broadcasting Co., owners of WCAU, the C. B. S. outlet.

Washington listeners may hear an inaugural broadcast from KYW today at 12 midnight on WRC with a galaxy of radio stars and dance bands.

THE largest commercial contract ever arranged locally, continuing Arch MacDonald on WJSV for 52 weeks starting April 2, 1935, will be signed today during the sports announcer's WJSV spot at 6:15 p. m.

With wire information furnished by the Washington Post, Arch will broadcast his usual play-by-play accounts of all of the Washington Senator's out-of-town games, in cooperation with People's Drug Stores, sponsors of the series.

The contract will be officially signed by representatives of his sponsors; Jess Willard, manager of WJSV; and Charles Moore, promotion manager of the Post. The series will be heard on WJSV at 6:15 p. m. weekdays and at 7:15 p. m. Sundays.

A "new trend" in presenting music of the world's masters with four major musical series is being observed by C. B. S. in addition to its regular weekly concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra and the New York Philharmonic.

Price Gains Held.

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Reports from leading steel manufacturing centers indicated that scrap steel prices have held their gains of the last few weeks. The Cincinnati market has lately responded to the rise in other markets, and Cleveland brokers are said to have raised their buying prices.

Price Resistance Developing.

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—"Price resistance is developing in finished goods markets," says the current letter of Scheuer & Co., cloth brokers. "The decline in gray goods prices has been arrested and in some lines the tide has unmistakably turned."

Week's Financing Scheduled.

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—State and municipal financing scheduled for next week aggregates $20,878,100, against $11,575,597 for the current week, according to the Daily Bond Buyer.

Breeden, Guilty In Arson Case, Gets Five Years

Fairfax Merchant Is Sentenced After Jury's 7-Hour Deliberation.

I. J. Breeden, merchant of Fairfax County near Centerville, Va., was found guilty of arson by a jury in circuit court at Fairfax courthouse early yesterday after seven hours' deliberation. He was sentenced to 5 years in the State penitentiary.

The case grew out of a fire on September 16, in a tenant house near Centerville owned by Breeden. There was $2,500 insurance on the house, which was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Burnley.

Burnley, originally indicted with Breeden, secured a severance and turned State's evidence.

He testified that the house caught fire on Labor Day, but had been saved by the intervention of neighbors.

Sheriff E. P. Kirby, of Fairfax County, in conjunction with the State fire marshal's office, began an investigation after the fire September 16. Arrested, Burnley accused Breeden of setting fire to the house, saying that Breeden had offered him free rent if he would start a blaze in the place, which was valued at $3,000.

After Labor Day, Burnley moved most of his furniture from the house, he testified, and Mrs. Burnley went to visit relatives. On the night of the fire he said he was awakened by Breeden, who said "The house is on fire. Get out."

During the trial Breeden claimed innocence, maintaining that he did not leave his own home on the night of the fire.

Judge Walter T. McCarthy presided at the trial, and the attorneys were Wilson M. Farr, Commonwealth's attorney, and Robert Hutchison, defense.

Free Library Seeking Funds

Frederick Association Is Making Public Appeal; Donations Tied Up.

Frederick, Md., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—A public appeal for funds for the continued maintenance of the Frederick Free Library is being made by the board of directors of the Free Library Association.

The library, which is sustained partly through annual contributions by the city and Frederick County, and partly through private donations, finds that additional funds are necessary at this time for the support of the association.

Although the Free Library has been the recipient of several large donations, the money is invested and not available at this time.

Plans have been under consideration for the purchase of a site for the library, which is now located in the old Academy Building, as provided for by a donation of Mrs. Margaret E. Hood. Three locations have been considered—the present site, the Trail home on East Church street, and the Frederick Female Seminary Buildings.

Pythians Begin Christmas Relief

Lodge at Fredericksbrug to Distribute Toys.

Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—Christmas relief by the Fredericksburg Pythian Lodge was begun last week under the chairmanship of H. T. Ballard.

The lodge for the last five years has solicited merchants for slightly damaged and unsalable toys for distribution to underprivileged children of the community.

The Pythian committee includes H. T. Ballard, W. D. Mills, I. H. Middleton, James Ship, Percy Jones, and P. G. Mantzuris.

FERA Appoints Mayor.

Front Royal, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—Hugh E. Naylor, of Front Royal, has been appointed director of a project under the Federal Emergency Relif Administration for indexing and reindexing the records in the office of the clerk of the court of Warren County. Work on the project will begin next week. An allocation of approximately $1,900 has been made.

Three Virginia Counties Added To Post's Scholarship Contest

1,317 More Students Are Entered as Interest in Competition Grows.

Three more counties, known as "the Alleghany Tier" in Virginia, were added last week to the territory of the second Washington Post Scholarship Competition because of the keen interest the project has aroused among high school students throughout this western borderline section of the State.

The area now covered reaches into 43 counties in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, in addition to the District of Columbia and the City of Alexandria, Va.

Extending the eligibility line originally prescribed in the competition's rules, contest officials agreed to open opportunities for scholarship awards in Washington universities to Alleghany, Bath and Highland counties in Virginia, where practically all eligible schools have signified their desire to enroll the entire fourth-year classes, and in several cases, their juniors as well.

Enrollments reaching competition headquarters at The Post during the past two weeks from 40 schools, embracing a total of 1,317 new entrants, brought the project's latest count of participants to 7,382 in 165 secondary schools.

Students Enthused.

Teachers report the contest is arousing spontaneous response among many students, who are forming themselves into class teams to collect clippings and other reading material for use in debates, as well as in the essays to be submitted on the stipulated governmental topics.

The schools which were enrolled from the "Alleghany Tier" counties include the Covington, Cilfton Forge and Low Moor high schools in Alleghany County, the Millboro High School in Bath County and the Blue Grass High School at Crabbottom and the McDowell High School in Highland County.

W. R. Curfman, principal and social science teacher at Covington, has enrolled his entire senior class of 57 students; at Low Moor all seniors will participate under the direction of Miss Lucy Gleason, civics teacher; Miss Margaret Gambrill, English teacher, and L. S. Shires, principal; and at Cilfton Forge, V. J. Love, principal, has entered both his entire senior and junior classes, totaling 68 students, who will work under direction of Thomas G. Hamilton, teacher of civics and English.

C. E. May, English teacher and principal, will direct the competition at the Millboro School, with the assistance of Miss Marjorie Carter, history teacher. At Crabbottom, C. G. Bailey, principal, and Miss Annabell McEwen, teacher of civics and English, will be in charge of the work, with all seniors enlisted. At McDowell, both upper classes, seniors and juniors, are at work on the contest under Henry P. White, principal, and Miss Leola Swadley, civics, and Miss Helen Smith, English teacher.

Other Enrollments.

Other Virginia enrollments were as follows:

In Albemarle County—Juniors and seniors at Greenwood, under R. Claude Graham, principal and civics teacher, and Miss Elizabeth Sutherland, English; juniors and seniors at Meriwether-Lewis in Ivy, Guy P. Morris, principal, and Miss Eileen Graham, English and problems in democracy teacher.

Augusta County — Staunton Military Academy, 100 juniors and seniors under Maj. W. C. Colvin, history and civics; Maj. Brice, English, and A. E. Everett, principal; Beverly Manor High School at Staunton, seniors and juniors, under Miss E. G. Hupman, history and civics teacher, and W. B. Wiley, principal; Robert E. Lee at Staunton, H. L. Bridges, principal; Miss Sarah Bell, and Miss Laura Brown, history and civics; Fairfax Hall at Waynesboro, seniors, under Mrs. John Noble Maxwell, principal, and Mrs. Robert Hoskins, history teacher; Fishburne Military Academy at Waynesboro, juniors and seniors, under Capt. D. G. Price, English; Capt. E. G. Fishburne, history, and Col. Morgan H. Hudgins, principal; Spottswood, juniors and seniors, J. M. Garber, principal; Miss Jane Carson, history, and G. W. Koogler, English; Booker T. Washington at Staunton, juniors and seniors, under D. M. Crockett, principal, and T. B. Evans, history and civics; Stuart Draft, juniors and seniors under E. E. Cox, principal and history teacher; Mount Sidney, juniors and seniors, O. S. Crute, principal; J. C. McCue, jr., history and civics, and Miss Dorothy Jones, English; Weyers Cave, seniors, J. D. Kramer, principal; Miss Claire Stone, civics and history, and Miss Frances Crawford, English teacher.

Culpeper County—Brandy High School, all juniors and seniors, under H. J. Meredith, principal; P. D. Griffith, civics, and Miss Thelma Stinnett, English.

Fairfax County—Clifton Station High School, seniors, under G. A. Waltz, principal and civics teacher, and Miss Dorothy Dall, English.

Fauquier County—Calverton, juniors and seniors, C. M. Bradley, principal, and Henry H. L. Smith, English; Bealeton, juniors and seniors, under John A. Cox, principal and civics teacher; Rosenwald at Warrenton, seniors and juniors, William C. Taylor, principal, and Miss R. E. Matthews, civics.

Loudoun County — Waterford, seniors, under Miss Katharine Bridges, civics, and J. Lupton Simpson, principal.

Madison County—Criglersville, juniors and seniors, Miss L. A. Davis, principal, and Misses F. P. Booton and M. B. Smith, civics and English teachers; Madison, juniors and seniors, Rothwell Lillard, principal, and Misses Virginia Fray and Reba Huckstep, civics and English.

Prince William County — Haymarket, juniors and seniors, under William Lynn, principal and civics teacher, and Mrs. Mary S. Meade, English teacher; Manassas Industrial, seniors, under W. P. Bird, civics, and G. Dudley, principal.

G. Hisey, civics; Edinburg, seniors, under A. A. Lutz, principal and civics teacher; Massanutten Academy at Woodstock, seniors, under T. D. Cobb, dean and civics teacher, and Dr. H. J. Benchoff, principal; Woodstock High School, seniors and juniors, R. M. Hook, principal, and Misses Margaret Macruder and Mary B. Bowman, civics and English.

From Carroll County in Maryland came the enrollment of the Mount Airy High School, where Robert Etzler is directing the work in his economics class. G. D. Martin, principal, will supervise the competition there.

Open to High Schools.

The competition is open to bona fide students enrolled in the public, private and parochial high schols within the competition area. Certificates of honor will be awarded each school finals champion, a silver medal to each division winner, and major awards, to champions of campus finals next spring, will be as follows:

At American University, four 4-year tuition scholarships in the College of Liberal Arts to the two highest rated girl competitors and the two highest rated boy competitors;

At the Catholic University of America, one 4-year tuition scholarship to the highest-rated boy competitor, in College of Arts and Sciences or School Engineering.

At Georgetown University, one 4-year tuition scholarship to highest rated boy competitor in School of Foreign Service.

At Howard University, two 1-year tuition scholarships, to be supplemented by annual tuition scholarships for three years as winners rate promotion—one to the highest rated boy competitor and one to the highest rated girl competitor—in the Undergraduate College.

Virginia Plans Water Works School System

Officials and Employes to Be Given Course of Instruction.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 2 (AP).—Preparations for the establishment of schools for water works superintendents and operators at convenient points throughout the State were announced here today.

The training courses have been arranged by the Virginia section of the American Water Works Association in conjunction with the League of Virginia Municipalities, the State Department of Health, the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, the State Division of Trade and Industrial Education, and the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce.

The announcement was made by Maj. Richard Messer, director of the the bureau of sanitary engineering of the State department of health, and Harold I. Baumes, director of personnel training of the League of Virginia Municipalities.

The schools are to be conducted on a zone basis at the following points: Bluefield, Charlottesville, Danville, Farmville, Lexington, Norfolk, Norton, Richmond, Salem and Winchester.

It was estimated that there are 285 water supplies in Virginia employing in the aggregate several hundred people. Higher standards for the operation of water works systems and the increasing complexity of various processes for the proper treatment of water require higher qualifications in water works operators and employes than ever before, the announcement said.

The schools are to be conducted without additional expense to the taxpayers or water departments. The discussion leaders will serve without pay, and the administrative expense is to be borne by the organizations sponsoring the schools.

Potatoes and Cabbage Received for the Poor

Warrenton, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—Mrs. Ruth Thompson, in charge of the FERA office of Fauquier County, in Warrenton, has received a carload of cabbage to be distributed in the counties of Fauquier, Loudoun, Page, Rappahannock, Shenandoah and Warren. The Warrenton office has also lately received a carload of potatoes for the same county distribution.

Mrs. Thompson has also been instructed to place in all the sewing rooms throughout the county machines to enable the workers to turn out more quickly garments with which to clothe the many on the relief rolls. The machines are to be installed in the Warrenton sewing room and a call is made by Mrs. Thompson for old machines.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

REPORTS of steady overtime in the Disbursing Division, Veterans' Administration, are denied by officials at Arlington Building. It was pointed out that when many employes work on Saturday afternoons, compensatory time off is given, but this compensation is not extended for any other period of overtime.

BAKER.

When asked why additional employes were not put on for the extra work, officials offered three reasons for avoiding personnel expansion.

The extremely temporary nature of the rush periods;

The highly technical and responsible nature of the work (which is the handling of checks for veterans), and, that the employes are not overworked.

According to several employes in the Disbursing Division, several persons have collapsed and have gone home ill from long hours of work. Complaints also have been heard on the poor lighting in that division.

John M. Stedman Retires.

John Moore Stedman, specialist in agricultural extension, Extension Service, Agriculture, retired Saturday after 26 years service. He was honored at a luncheon by members of the Extension Service staff and the Office of Experiment Stations, of which he was formerly a member.

M. C. Wilson, in charge of extension studies, presided at the luncheon. Speakers included C. W. Warburton, extension director; C. B. Smith, assistant director, and C. Thom, in charge of the Division of Soil Microbiology, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, who formerly served with Mr. Stedman on the faculty of the University of Missouri. Mr. Stedman was presented with a silver pitcher.

Mr. Stedman is an alumnus of Cornell University, class of '88. He was employed as an entomologist at the Cornell Experiment Station for two years, and was professor of biology at Trinity College, Durham, N. C.; at Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala., and at the University of Missouri.

He came to the Department of Agriculture in 1909. He had also been employed as biologist for the department in 1890 and 1891.

Mr. Stedman is a member of the American Association of Economic Entomologists, and numerous other scientific orgnaizations. He plans to leave Washington early this month with his wife and daughter to make their home in Springfield, Mo. They formerly lived at 1606 Allison street northwest.

A STAG night entertainment has been arranged by members of the Auditing Department Bowling League at Home Owners Loan Corporation, to be given at the Lafayette Hotel Friday night. A dinner will be the feature of the gathering. Reservations are being made through R. C. Robert, (C), chairman, chief of Voucher Audit Section; T. H. Daly, Review Board, and C. W. Howard. The affair will begin at 7 p. m.

Charles B. Parker, formerly of Agriculture, has been appointed a junior patent examiner at Commerce.

Travel Program Arranged.

War Department Local, No. 261, National Federation of Federal Employes, will hold a combination business and social meeting tomorrow night at 8 o'clock at District headquarters, 710 Fourteenth street northwest, under direction of the president, Miss Gertrude Coyle.

An illustrated talk on a cruise around the world will be given through the courtesy of Mrs. Laura L. Waters, president of the National Parks Club of America, Inc. The social hour is sponsored by the personnel of the Army Finance Office, and has been arranged by a committee consisting of Miss Bernadette M. Allen, Mrs. M. E. Donnelly, Mrs. Anna Knight and Miss Pearle Cooper (P).

Mrs. E. V. Steely, Animal Husbandry Division, Agriculture, entertained several visitors from Philadelphia over the week-end.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF your name in this column is followed by F, P or C, call in person on the Federal Diary Editor. You will receive tickets to Loew's (F) Fox (stage, Ferde Grofe and his famous radio orchestra and other acts; screen, Anna Sten in "We Live Again"); or to Loew's (P) Palace, (second week of Greta Garbo in "The Painted Veil"); or to Loew's (C) Columbia (King Vidor's mighty epic "Our Daily Bread").

Diary office hours are, daily, except Sunday, 12 noon to 1 p. m. and from 4:30 to 6 p. m.; Saturday, 12 noon to 2:30 p. m.

Word has just been received that Miss Thelma Franke (P), formerly of Animal Husbandry Division, Agriculture, was married to P. D. Sanders, of Richmond, Va., on Thanksgiving Day at the Little Church Around the Corner, in New York. Mr. Sanders is editor of the Southern Planter. Miss Franke is from Indianapolis, and was selected as the typical Indiana girl in the Federal Diary's Parade of States. The couple will reside in Richmond.

A. F. G. E. Meetings.

Three meetings of the American Federation of Government Employes lodges are listed for this week as follows:

Tomorrow, 8 p. m.—Association of Professional and Technical Employes Lodge, No. 121, Mount Pleasant Library.

Tomorrow, 4:45 p. m.—War Department Lodge, No. 16, Room 2530, Munitions Building.

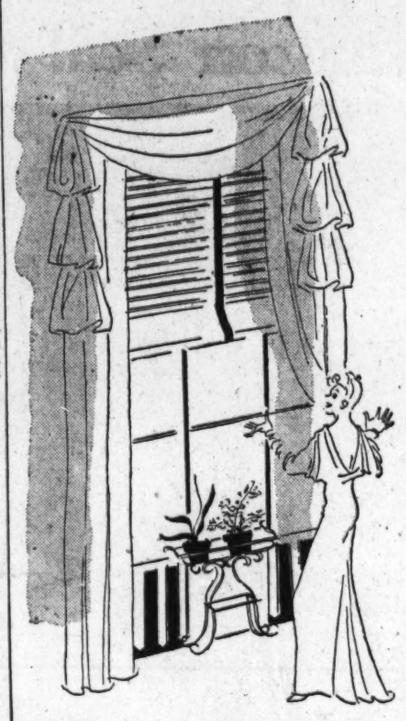
Five Rinses for 25¢
The Hecht Co.
F Street at Seventh

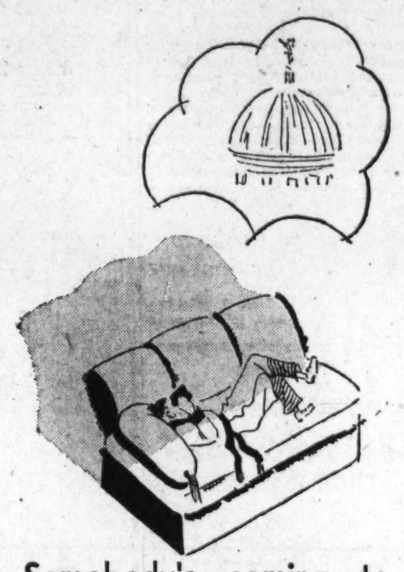
WHY is it that furniture that looked so beautiful in Kansas City or East Orange looks so very peculiar on Connecticut Avenue, after being arranged with the doubtful artistry of moving men? Why is it that no two homes ever seem to be obliging enough to have the same number of windows? And why, at times likes these, does melancholia suddenly set in?

The Hecht Co. has all the answers. Don't be hasty about murdering the children . . . and dividing up the books with the husband whom you are going to divorce on the grounds of incompetent curtain-hanging. Don't be hasty . . . when all you need do is call District 9400 . . . or drop in, huh?



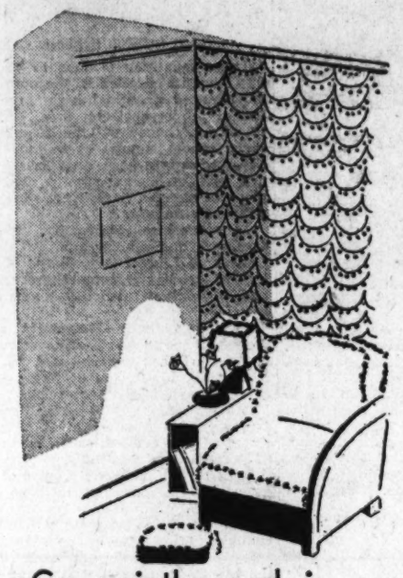
Nude windows don't have a bit of charm . . .

A little thing you've probably already learned, to your sorrow. We have a mammoth variety of ready-made curtains and draperies that are grandly attractive. Or, how's about selecting your own luscious fabrics up here on the sixth floor . . . and we'll make window-apparel of an elegance, to your order. Personally, we adore venetian blinds . . . also to your order, any size, any color. Ready-made venetian blinds, too. Actually. And don't worry, we'll put 'em up.



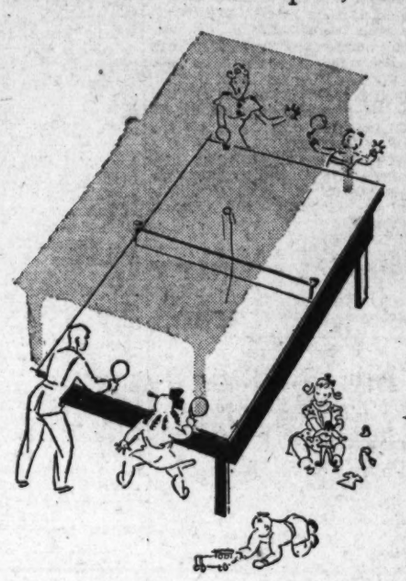
Somebody's coming to your house . . .

Come on, come on, you might as well face the facts. You're going to have a steady stream of visitors just as soon as you're settled. All your cousins from Milwaukee . . . and your sisters and your aunts. People who "have always meant to visit the Capital" and who "now have no excuse." (And no excuse you think of is going to work, either.) Studio couches, extra beds and pillows (from the fourth floor) are marvelous aids to such inescapables.



Go quietly mad in our wall-paper shop . . .

We don't mind a bit. Every one does. We've got the wall-paper. And our wall-paper's got everything. It's got rhythm. It's got soul. It's got charm. It's got that thing . . . that certain thing that will give warmth and color and beauty and richness to those lucky, lucky rooms of yours. Some of the patterns are the most amusing things we can think of at the moment. Some are for beautiful libraries. We'll recommend expert union men to do the hanging . . . and men to do the painting, too . . . for we can supply any color you can imagine. All this on the fifth floor.



We recommend that you keep the children amused, while all this is going on. Our toy department has thought of everything: the children problem . . . and problem children. Give them a first-class escalator ride up to the third floor, where you'll find playthings for the most imaginative of your little geniuses. We've lots of games for you, too. (At your age?—At any age!) And, even if you've added ten years in the process of moving, ping pong is an excellent means of bringing yourself back alive.

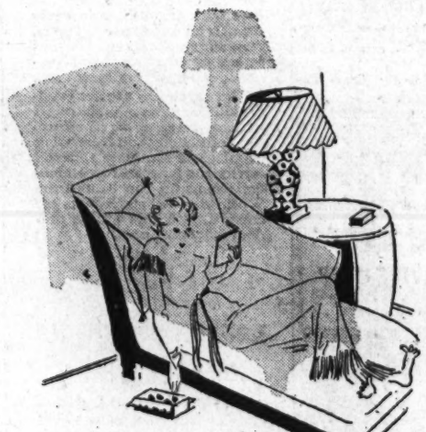
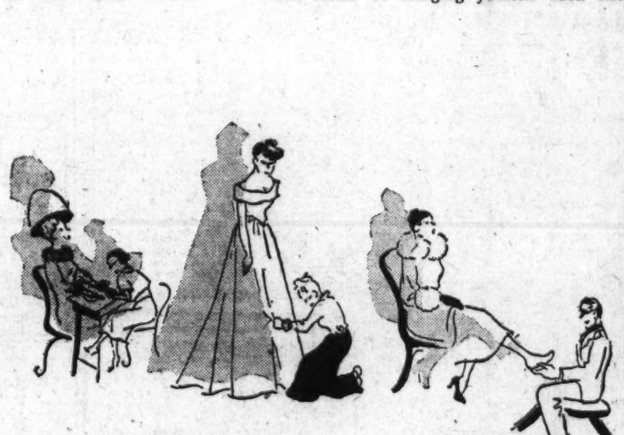
Linoleum needn't be confined to kitchens . . .

or bathrooms, either. But this doesn't mean that we aren't plentifully supplied with linoleum for any room in the house. Are you an old-fashioned girl? Well, we don't turn up our efficient noses at conventional linoleum. Are you one of these here moderns? Prance up to our sixth floor. Pick your pattern. Close your eyes and count to ten and take the long way home. And, there it'll be on your floor . . . because, of course, we do that, too.



Whew, now that we've worked our fingers to the bone for you . . .

There's that corner that you haven't managed to fill. And that lamp Uncle Alec gave you . . . you've been living for the moment when you could replace it. Look, whether your taste runs to early American or late French, we're the boys who have the pieces that look as if they belonged with the ones you already have. The fourth floor is the place for lamps and living room pieces. Amble up to the seventh for your bedroom and dining room furniture.



For goodness' sake, don't let yourself go . . .

This is no time to let your hair hang down and your shoes turn over. This is the moment when you should look very calm and very slick and cause your awe-inspired husband to gaze at you with new admiration. We've every describable kind of apparel for every describable kind of person . . . but think of yourself, first. Spend a few days selecting clothes that will make you beautiful. Have yourself gloriously renovated. Why not? You'll have lots of time. Haven't we offered to do all the work?

Japan Spreads Its Manchurian Railway System

Lines' Construction Sped; Crack Trains Now Operating.

Dairen, Kwantung Leased Territory (Manchuria), Dec. 2 (AP).—One of the world's greatest and most modern railway systems, one likely to figure decisively in the Orient's history in the near future, is rapidly spreading through Manchuria toward its farthest boundaries, where Japan's protege empire, Manchukuo, faces the Soviet.

In two years the South Manchuria Railway has completed 180 miles of new railways and is continuing at the same rate on other projected rail lines.

Contracts have been awarded for construction of 93 miles of line from Solun to Wenchuan, near the Mongolian border; 112 miles from Lishoukuo to Mishpan, north of Pogranichnaya, and approximately 50 miles from Ssupingkai to Hsian, south of Hsinkiang.

These roads ostensibly are being built for the Manchukuo government, but actually the South Manchuria Railway, long Japanese-owned, builds, operates and controls the entire system.

The South Manchuria Railway, in addition to its construction operations, has started running one of the crack trains of the world, easily the fastest in Asia.

It is named the "Asia," and covers the 435 miles between Dairen and Hsinking, the new capital of Manchoukuo, in 8 hours 30 minutes at the rate of 51 miles an hour, not allowing for stops.

The Asia consists of entirely new equipment, all built in Manchuria by the S. M. R.'s own shops. It embodies many of the new "streamline" ideas which have been built into new trains in the United States.

To accomodate this new fast equipment and to penetrate the wilderness of the new empire where the "iron horse" has never been seen before, the program of new construction has been undertaken.

Turkey Cash

Virginia Girl, 15, Runs Paying Poultry Farm.

Manassas, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—For four years Minnie Meryl Squires, 15, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Squires, of Greenwich, Va., has been in the turkey-raising business. Three of those years she has supported herself.

Minnie Meryl began with a hatching of three chicks, which were given her by Mr. Leach, manager of Mr. Michael's Lawn Farms, of Greenwich. Turkeys from the Lawn Farms have won all sweepstakes of the State turkey conventions.

Now her flock consists of 131 turkeys, 120 of which will be taken to the market between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

For three years Minnie Meryl has clothed herself, bought all her school supplies, attended the 4-H Club summer camp at Jamestown every year and brought all equipment needed in the raising of her turkeys.

Minnie Meryl is a sophomore in the Nokesville High School.

Mussolini Awards Prizes for Wheat

Two Bishops Are Among the Winners.

Rome, Dec. 2 (AP).—Premier Mussolini, addressing more than 70 prize winners in Fascism's "wheat victory" campaign, told them today that "only God can bend the Fascist will; men and things, never." He awarded prizes ranging from 1,000 lire ($850) to 40 times that amount for helping make Itialy self-supporting in wheat production. Il Duce awarded medals to two bishops—Msgr. Giovanni Constantini, of Spezia, and Msgr. Glosue Cattarossi, of Belluno e Feltre—congratulating them for their advice and encouragement to farmers of their diocese.

Detectives, Parishioners Watch Gloria at Church

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Watched by three detectives and a number of delighted parishioners, Gloria Vanderbilt, 10-year-old heiress, went to church again today.

She attended St. Mary's Catholic Church in Roslyn, Long Island, with her aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, in whose custody she has been placed as a ward of the Supreme Court. After the mass virtually all the parishioners torried outside for another glimpse of the heiress, who smiled brightly at them.

17 Lives Feared Lost In Wrecked Steamer

Melbourne, Australia, Dec. 2 (AP). Part of the wreckage of the coastal steamer Coramba was washed ashore today, raising fears that 17 persons aboard had drownde. Two bodies were washed ashore yesterday, bearing lifebelts from the steamer.

The Coramba is believed to have foundered during the terrific wind and rainstorm which lashed the coast for two days, causing great property damage and bringing death to eight known persons.

Unusual Divorce Case Settled.

Merced, Calif. (U.P.).—A woman, who is not a citizen of the United States, who was not at court proceedings, and who first was sued by her husband, obtained a divorce and custody of her daughter at a recent court hearing here. The woman, Mrs. Earl L. R. Whitehead, a resident of Bermuda, a British possession, obtained the divorce on her cross-complaint and deposition.

soon were on the scene. Across approximately 200 yards of muddy, racing water, the boys could be seen waving and shouting from their island trap.

It was at first believed that the marooned victims were a man and woman.

After almost an hour of rescue attempts, further plans were abandoned and an emergency call was sent to the Washington Navy Yard.

The Coast Guard Cutter Dione, on special duty from her base at Norfolk, Va., was anchored at the navy yard. Several members of the crew, trained in rescue work, were immediately dispatched.

Under the command of Lieut. S. R. Sands, the Coast Guardsmen loaded a large surf boat onto a Navy truck and hurried to the scene. With the aid of spectators, firemen and policemen, the boat was carried overland from Conduit road to the C. & O. Canal. In the canal it was floated upstream to a point about one-half mile above the island.

Carried to Shoreline.

Again the heavy craft was lifted from the water and carried to the Potomac shoreline. The Coast Guardsmen prepared to battle a 25-mile-an-hour current. Life belts were donned and a mile-long line was attached to one end of the boat.

Word from the Weather Bureau brought reports of heavy flood waters above Great Falls. There was little time to make the rescue before raging torrents inundated the tiny island. The marooned boys were in danger of drowning and rescue work developed into a race with probable death.

For a time it was almost decided to abandon the boat as a rescue medium and summon seaplanes from the naval air base in Anacostia. Rapidly rising waters, however, frustrated the plan, and with cheerful "good-bys" the Coast Guardsmen shoved off.

The heavy surf boat tossed like a scrap of paper as it plunged into the rapids. With Chief Boatswain H. V. Neilson at the helm and four guardsmen manning oars, the craft bobbed and rolled on its perilous journey to the island. On shore, volunteer helpers fed trailing rope lines into the water.

Across on the island, watchers could see the marooned youngsters waving and shouting. A cheer from the spectators greeted the rescue boat as it gained the river center.

Boat Is Landed.

Bert and Eric had taken refuge in a deserted cabin on the island. When they saw the rescuers leave shore, they scrambled over fallen trees and logs to the upper end of the island. It was there, after a several minutes' struggle, that the Coast Guard boat landed.

Veteran rivermen predicted the crew would be unable to navigate the return trip. The crowd watched breathlessly. Events which followed rivaled a movie sea thriller.

The Coast Guard crew severed their safety line and pulled for shore. Swirling waters turned the boat sidewise and threatened to send it far downstream. As the craft neared shore, it could be seen that the rescued youngsters were lying on the bottom. Seamen at the oars were pulling with all their strength. Boatswain Nielson shouted instructions.

A moment later the boat lurched into shallow water at the shore and willing hands lifted the pale-faced boys to dry land. The crew was showered with congratulations. Then Bert McCann, with his now grinning companion at his side, told the story:

"We were just going over to the Virginia side to see some friends. We have often made the trip, but I guess the water was a little too rough today. About 9 o'clock this morning we borrowed a canoe and started over.

Sail for Island.

"Half way out, Eric looked at Snake Island and said it was moving. We couldn't manage the canoe. We decided the best thing to do was to hit for the island, so we did. The canoe swept away from us as we got to shore and we grabbed hold of some low swinging tree branches. Then we almost had to swim to the cabin steps. After awhile we began to signal for help."

The boys said they weren't frightened until after the first few hours.

"Then we weren't really afraid," they agreed, "but were wondering how we were going to get home."

Before they could see rescue efforts on the Maryland shore, the boys said they had made plans to stay all night. They said they didn't want to fall asleep because of the cold and had agreed to keep each other awake.

Call for Help.

When they realized their predicament was serious, the youngsters wrote three notes and stuffed them in empty bottles they found in the cabin. They threw the bottles into the river, hoping some one would find their SOS. The notes gave their location and asked finders to "please hurry help."

Although credit for the actual rescue went to the Coast Guard, others congratulated for their work were Inspector Frank S. W. Burke, chief of Washington detectives, and four of his men; members of the District and suburban rescue squads and Montgomery County, Md., police.

Inspector Burke, when he feared rescue efforts might fail telephoned Baltimore for a breeches buoy. Local Navy authorities said they were not equipped to shoot a breeches line to the island.

Hundreds of Sunday motorists attracted by fire engines and police cars, gathered at the scene together with residents of the community.

Last night, at home with their families, the bewildered youngsters had little to say except they were glad to be home.

"We sure want to thank those Coast Guard fellows—gee, they were swell. It was some adventure."

branches of the Antietam ran over their banks. The Waynesboro airport, representing two years of relief work, was wiped out and cellars in the town and most of the outlying sections were flooded.

The Potomac at Harpers Ferry continued to rise last night, according to the Weather Bureau, reaching a stage of "about 21 feet." Reports from Hagerstown, however, indicated that the river was falling after reaching a peak of about 13½ feet above normal.

Residents Warned.

At Cumberland, Hancock, Harpers Ferry and Sycamore Island, on the Potomac, and Riverton on the Shenandoah, the Weather Bureau observers were keeping close watch on the river. In Washington the Harbor Police patrolled the Georgetown channel, warning waterfront residents of the rising water, checking boat moorings and clearing the river of driftwod.

Early yesterday the police picked up three cabin cruisers drifting in the channel and towed them back to their moorings at Crampton's boat house near Key Bridge.

The Weather Bureau said the high water would be confined to the Potomac between its junction with the Shenandoah at Harper's Ferry and Washington. The river generally is expected to overflow into lowlands only and cover large portions of low-lying islands in the vicinity of Glen Echo.

Rayon Threatening Brazil Cotton Trade

Imported Fabric Damaging Newist Industry.

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 2 (AP).—Brazil, having increased is exports of cotton by 3,600 per cent in one year, today showed signs of worry over the inroads of foreign rayon at home.

The Foreign Trade Council, meeting tomorrow, is expected to reach some decision on the policy to be adopted toward growing imports of rayon.

Complaints have come to the commerce section of the ministry of foreign relations that foreign rayon threatens extinction of Brazil's relatively new cotton industry, which in one year attained second place in the nation's economy, next to coffee.

While exports of cotton, notably to Europe, were 37 times as great in 1934 as in 1933, the total production of cotton did not quite double, indicating the domestic market is equally important.

Watchers Guard Grave of Nelson

Wait for Possible Return of Outlaw's Widow.

Chicago, Dec. 2 (AP).—In the shadows of St. Joseph's Cemetery watchers tonight kept a furtive vigil at the grave of George (Baby Face) Nelson.

They waited for the possible return of Mrs. Helen Gillis, widow of the public enemy No. 1, who was presumed to be with him when his weapons Tuesday took the life of two Federal agents.

It is possible, Department of Justice officials said, that Mrs. Gillis, who disappeared after the slayings, may return to the grave. At Nelson's funeral where guards also had been posted to arrest her if she appeared, came a floral piece with the inscription: "To our loving husband and father." Police attempted to trace the source of the wreath, unsuccessfully.

"It looks like a mess in which politics has been figuring to the detriment of public service, but I do not know on which side or to how great an extent, and I shall have to go more deeply into the situation before I express any opinion as to where the major fault lies.

"The public service should be clean and above reproach, and I will vote to apply the scrub brush wherever it needs to be applied."

Vote Against the Rider.

Members voting "yes," besides Representative May, are:

Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), Kansas.

Representative Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), Illinois.

Representative Donald C. Dobbins (Democrat) Illinois.

Representative Andrew J. Montague (Democrat), Virginia.

Representative John B. Hollister (Republican), Ohio.

Senator-elect Vic Donahey, of Ohio, declined to vote until he had heard both sides, but he said he is "for a square deal, whether it be in the classified or unclassified service."

Representative John E. Rankin (Democrat), Mississippi, said he would give the matter "careful consideration."

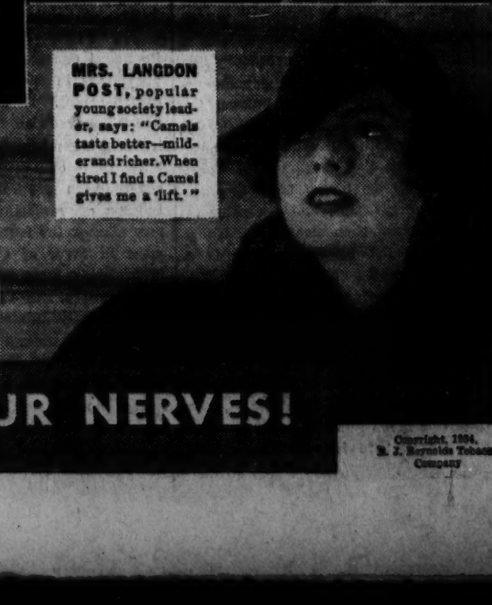
ARCHITECT. W. R. Ballard reports: When I feel listless a Camel restores my energy. And I find my mind is clearer ... more alert."

BANK TELLER: "After any strain," says Baxter Davidson, "I get a 'lift' in energy from a Camel. Camels taste so good and don't disturb my nerves."



MRS. LANGDON POST, popular young society leader, says: "Camels taste better—milder and richer. When tired I find a Camel gives me a 'lift.'"

● From London to Australia—11,323 miles—in 93 hours and 7 minutes! Even motor trouble, enforced repairs, reduced oil pressure could not stop Roscoe Turner. His courage, his indomitable energy kept him on and on. When questioned about his smoking Colonel Turner, who understands well the value of a full reservoir of natural, healthy energy, said: "A speed flyer uses up energy just as his motor uses 'gas'—and smoking a Camel gives one a 'refill' on energy. I notice especially that after smoking a Camel I get a new feeling of well-being and vim. I smoke Camels all I want. They never upset my nerves."

A Sign Of The Times.

Demands for revision of the Constitution to adapt it to modern conditions no longer arouse suspicion or resentment on the part of patriotic Americans. However, it is still somewhat startling and certainly significant to find such an arch conservative and stanch upholder of the Constitution as James M. Beck, former Solicitor General, suggesting changes in the "mechanical details" of the governmental machinery set up by the Constitution.

Although Mr. Beck would not tamper with those basic constitutional theories, which he holds to be as "deep, accurate and true" as when adopted, he nevertheless admits that certain alterations are required in our political institutions as a result of extensive economic and social changes.

If Congress intends to pass laws that jeopardize constitutionally guaranteed rights, thus placing upon the Supreme Court a great and increasing responsibility for determining their validity, we shall need amendments that go beyond the mechanical changes recommended by Mr. Beck. Should the present trend toward a highly centralized government with plenary powers continue, Congress should face the issue squarely and decide what basic changes are needed to validate policies and practices that can not be justified so long as existing constitutional limitations and prohibitions remain. The Supreme Court should not be subjected to the intolerable pressure that comes from perpetual conflict between legislative policies and constitutional restrictions upon legislative powers.

Realism On The Bonus.

Preparations to sidetrack the demands of veterans' organizations for prepayment of the so-called bonus are being quietly made by administrative officials. Reports of a compromise being worked out by the Veterans' Administration are current, but the proposals emanating from this source are of such a nature as to discourage any action on the bonus issue.

The American Legion is making its appeal for prepayment of the adjusted compensation certificates on the ground that it would relieve veterans in want. Taking this cue, some officials are suggesting that unemployed veterans without other resources be allowed to cash their certificates at their present value. Prepayment of the entire face value of the certificates, which will not mature until 1945, would be a patent injustice to veterans excluded from the favored group, as well as to taxpayers. But, it is argued, this inequity would be eliminated by prepayment of what is now due, subtracting from the face value the interest that would accrue during the next 12 years.

While this plan would modify the original intent of Congress in dealing with the veterans it recognizes the bonus certificates for what they really are. For that very reason it might not be acceptable to the veterans' lobby. The great majority of our war-time soldiers have already borrowed 50 per cent of what Congress promised to pay them 12 years hence. Consequently, their present equity in the bonus certificates is very small. What they are really demanding is a gift of 12 years' interest in addition to the original adjustment.

The compromise plan serves chiefly to reemphasize the unfairness and the gross want of logic in the request for any action on the bonus at this time.

Poet And Farmer.

One could hardly ask for a neater contrast than the presence of Robert Frost and Secretary Wallace upon the same platform addressing a convention of English Teachers. One represents the old homely virtues of the New England farm; the other the new pioneering spirit which would turn the country's acreage into a vast, productive, profitable laboratory invulnerable to both drought and depression.

Mr. Frost, of course, is the rugged individualist who believes that contact with the rocky stone of the hillside farms near Monadnock affects the character of those who dwell there. To him a farm is more than a patch of parsnips, and a cluster of birch trees is more than firewood. He is not a sentimentalist by nature; he is a practical man as well as a poet. His verses are built rigorously, like a stone wall cutting a meadow in two. But there is sap in them, as in the maples in springtime.

Secretary Wallace, for all we know, may be a poet, too. He is, certainly, a dreamer. He sees beyond the hills, the maples, the birches, the stone walls to some distant meadow where nature is well under control and crops grow regularly under guidance from governmental authority. But perhaps he sees the farmer less clearly than what the farm produces. At any rate, his interest centers in a vast, organized, planned machine turning out turnips, spinning spinach, manufacturing meat.

Perhaps if Mr. Wallace wanted to, he could quote Mr. Frost's own verses in answer to the poet's boast that "you can take one poem and teach all there is to know about the New Deal." We are thinking of that one which begins:

Two roads diverged in a yellow wood,
And sorry I could not travel both
And be one traveler . . .

It ends with lines to which you may put your own interpretation:

I took the one least traveled by,
And that made all the difference.

Look Before Leaping.

President Roosevelt is said to favor substitution of a gigantic and comprehensive program of job-creation for the present system of Federal relief, which is a combination of jobs and doles. Theoretically a plan capable of providing work for the unemployed is much more desirable than one which maintains able-bodied men in idleness, tending to undermine their morale and leave the community poorer for lack of the goods and services they might be producing. But the placement of several million men in active employment is not a consummation that is assured merely by deciding to spend Government money for the purpose. The Federal Government has already expended several billions upon a construction program that has provided a very limited amount of direct work for the idle and has made no impression at all upon the total volume of unemployment.

Every student of the subject who has recommended public works as a means of absorbing the unemployed has emphasized the necessity of careful, preliminary planning of the program to be followed as a safeguard against futile dissipation of resources. Our experience with the PWA has shown how slow-moving and expensive the machinery of work-creation is certain to be in the absence of matured plans for going ahead. Yet, as if the lesson taught by that experiment has not yet been learned, rumors are heard to the effect that this program is to be expanded to cover a variety of activities in the field of housing, slum clearance and other self-sustaining projects.

Before embarking upon this new and untried venture, the Administration not only should have a comprehensive plan of development in mind, but it also should take time to consider the objectives sought. Is provision of work by an outpouring of additional billions of public funds going to create more permanent jobs for men and women in private employment? Or is it likely to stifle private initiative and hinder such reemployment?

Under the superficially alluring slogan, "Jobs Instead of Doles," there is a real danger that the country may be plunged into another hastily planned expedient for solving the unemployment problem. Neither jobs nor doles paid for out of the Federal Treasury can provide anything more than temporary support for the idle, pending revival of private industry. Certainly it is not too much to expect the Administration carefully to appraise the results of previous ventures in this field and then to restrain the theorists until and unless practical plans can be worked out to safeguard the country against another costly fiasco such as the CWA.

Short-Sighted Diplomacy.

For the moment interest has shifted from discussion of what the strength of the world's foremost navies ought to be to what it actually is. In London, Japan is demanding parity, which seems to mean the right to construct a navy as large as that maintained by the United States. Secretary Swanson's annual report shows that Japan already has virtual parity, so far as actual ships are concerned.

The relative standing of the British, American and Japanese navies on July 1, considering ships not yet obsolete, is given as follows:

Japan—165 ships of 654,425 tons.

Existing treaties establish a naval ratio of 5—5—3 for these three countries. But ships under construction in Japan will bring that country up to full treaty strength, with the exception of replacing a small destroyer lost at sea a few months ago. On the contrary, the United States has a right under the treaties to lay down 78 more ships. By merely citing these figures, the Secretary of the Navy emphasizes the wide gap between the actual size of the American Navy and its maximum strength contemplated in the London agreement of 1930.

The United States deliberately allowed its naval construction to lag behind treaty provisions in the hope of securing further disarmament. If naval strength had not now been made an acute international issue, it is quite propable that Congress would have been content with a very moderate construction program. But results of the London conversations have given rise to a new clamor for more vessels of war. Sentiment in favor of extensive naval building is probably stronger than at any time in recent years.

Apparently Japanese statesmen have not given much thought to the broad psychological effects of scrapping the naval treaty. Their attitude is certainly a negative factor so far as international good will is concerned, and it may be equally ineffective in augmenting Japan's relative naval strength. Not much can be said for diplomacy which inevitably places obstacles in the way of its own objective.

Politics In The Road Fund.

Thinking Marylanders are seriously disturbed over the revelations of the muddled finances of the State Roads Commission and properly so. Gov. Ritchie's frank and full statement discloses a situation that often arises when politically minded men are placed in charge of huge spending agencies with no independent, centralized control over State finances.

The Governor's inquiry developed that the commission's funds were virtually depleted; that it owed about $500,000 in current bills; that it had advanced to ten counties $726,081 in excess of their allotments and that the commission already had obligated $4,914,418 or about one-fourth of its anticipated revenue next year.

Mr. Ritchie gives assurance that all the overdrafted sums were legitimately spent, but he asserts that "there appears to be no possible way of justifying" the laxity of his commission in handling its funds. Undoubtedly it is humiliating for the Governor after 15 years service as an efficient administrator to be forced to make such a statement. Although he is neither an auditor nor a bookkeeper, the Governor can not escape responsibility for delinquencies in his own official family.

When scandal touched the roads commission in 1928, the people of Maryland had a right to assume that the reorganization carried out by the Governor then would place the finances of the commission under the jurisdiction of the State comptroller, an elected official. Apparently this was not done. The commission continued to determine, independently of outside accounting control, how the $16,000,000 or more which motorists annually pour into its coffers should be spent. If Governor-elect Nice is wise he will make the disbursements and commitments of this agency and every other State department subject to the comptroller's approval.

The need for rigid accounting control, essential in all private business, becomes imperative when men primarily interested in politics are placed in charge of large spending agencies. Unfortunately the roads commission has been tinged with politics for many years. Instead of seeking to divorce the commission from politics the Governor seemed to encourage it when he named so politically minded a person as E. Brooke Lee, of Montgomery County, as a member.

District Reorganization.

Reorganization of the District government again comes to the fore with the request of Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, for specific recommendations from the committees of experts which recently completed an extensive study of the subject. The Senator is known to be deeply interested in this as well as other District problems. It is not improbable that his forthcoming conference with the President will be followed by the drafting of legislation to be considered at the next session of Congress.

Several volumes of valuable data have been gathered by the municipal reorganization committee. Its advice will doubtless form the basis of a reorganization plan, even though the Congressional committees may not accept all of its suggestions. Local civic groups, also, will want to scrutinize each proposal, and, of course, they should be given every opportunity to do so. In a project of such far-reaching importance this second step—the ascertainment of public opinion—is no less important than the initial research and study by a group of experts.

The reorganization project is now assuming additional importance because of the light it will shed upon the problem of fiscal relations between the District and the Federal Government. In contrast to the survey of municipal tax rates in other cities proposed by President Roosevelt, the study made by William A. Roberts, people's counsel; Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor, and Lewis Douglas, former Director of the Budget, emphasize the extraordinary expenses incurred by the District because it is the National Capital. Senator King might perform a real service if he could persuade the President to support this more equitable means of determining the District's fiscal responsibility.

At any rate it is gratifying to note that Senator King continues to take a deep personal interest in the issues confronting the District. Many will hope that his activity in this field foreshadows a decision not to resign chairmanship of the Senate District Committee, at least until these vital problems have been disposed of.

How Very Old Is 60?

(From the San Francisco Chronicle.)

Winston Churchill is sure to start a controversy over his declaration that he is now getting to be a very old man. He will be 60 on the last day of this month.

Winston Churchill has lived a very active life, with travel, war, politics and authorship enlisting his enthusiastic and adventurous spirit. Reviewing in his books the great events of which he was a part—events that psychologically recede into far greater distance than chronologically—may have produced the illusion of "very great age." As early as 1930 he turned to autobiography in "My Early Life."

However, Churchill has extended the British author-statesman's idea of old age. Francis Bacon wrote in his time that "one and 30 years have run in the hourglass and I am an old man."

But it is quite more than likely that Churchill, instead of qualifying for the Townsend plan, is spoofing—perhaps taking a sly English dig at the elder statesmen who are still carrying on.

Letters to the Editor

A Hint To Veterans.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Having been put under fire by several of my friends over my recent letter to The Post relative to a proposed bonus march, I shall be greatly obliged if you will quote the following, which I hope will disabuse the present impression that I oppose the payment of the bonus:

Washington is already taxed to its utmost to care for those of its own people who are in dire want and, therefore, is in no way financially equal to the proposition of adding thousands more to its obligations.

Further, due to the depressive times, it should be legally the obligation of each State to care for its own needy.

As matters stand now, so says the press, the President is favorable to the payment of the bonus to all who really are in need of its benefits. And it is my unqualified opinion that he intends to let Congress handle the "needed appropriation proposition" according to their own knowledge of the limit of expenditures granted them by the Comptroller of the Currency.

But this one fact stands paramount, and should be seriously considered: Since its birth, this Government has given away billions of dollars to help mitigate suffering, want and woe among the populations of the earth; but at no time has any power whatsoever been able to take anything from it that it did not want to freely give.

WILLIAM MEYERS.
Washingotn, Nov. 29.

Spiritual Leadership.

To the Editor of The Post:—Sir: The President can do little more under the Constitution than serve in one way or another the people's material needs. The trouble is, the real needs of America and of the world are not material, but spiritual. It is putting the cart before the horse to feed the inert cart, the body, and starve the living horse, the soul.

Political leadership everywhere has failed, and will fail. Political leadership is an arm of flesh. But an arm of flesh is weak unless its nerves and sinews derive their power from spiritual forces.

The new leadership of America and of the world will be religious, not political. In the great reformation near at hand, kings will bow the knee to bishops, senators will wait upon men of God. Instead of discussions about the New Deal, the gold standard and inflation, men will talk and write about faith, duty, and the will of God.

CHARLES HOOPER.
Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, Nov. 24.

The Other Side.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With reference to the front page article entitled "Rider repeal to save 900 jobs favored in Post Congress poll," appearing in The Post of November 29, I think your paper has the wrong attitude in this matter.

Members of the alcohol tax unit, similar to those in other fields of Government activity, come and go, depending on public opinion evolving through legislation and law. Hence members of this unit have been coming for the past 15 to 21 years in many cases. I think this is a sufficiently long time to remain in the security and funds of the Federal Government.

Therefore, may I suggest that you cease your activities on behalf of those whom I have described above and assist, encourage and devise means by which hundreds of eligible, worthy and capable young men, of whom I am proud to be one, may make contact with their Government.

LAWRENCE THURMAN.

The Parking Problem.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Traffic Director Van Duzer deserves public commendation for the courageous stand he has taken on the parking situation.

Approximately one-half of the driving space on narrow streets in Washington is occupied for parking purposes. In these thoroughfares moving automobiles have extreme difficulty in passing. Under the circumstances, it is no wonder that Washington has a rather unenviable record for the number of people killed and injured by automobiles.

A few days ago, I noted that a certain group of citizens criticized the police very severely for the increasing number of traffic accidents in Washington. This criticism comes with poor grace from people who want to use the public streets for free garage space.

Naturally, those who park their cars on the streets will protest against the proposed new regulations. If the city furnished free house rent to several thousand of its population, one might expect a protest if it were suddenly taken away from them. It would be just as reasonable for the city to furnish free bedrooms to those who do not drive an automobile as to furnish free parking space to those who do. J. J. UNDERWOOD.
Washington, Nov. 30.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is my impression that municipally owned and operated garages at strategic points to provide suitable facilities at a nominal fee would overcome the parking problem for all concerned.

This would encourage car ownership, making it a pleasure to own one, instead of everlastingly pounding away at the owner and enacting obnoxious regulations which impel him to dispose of it.

I would like to see figures showing the amount of taxes per car lost to the municipality when one is eliminated.

Lack of sales would drive dealers out of business; transfers would diminish with loss of business to repair shops, parts and accessories dealers, oil and gasoline stations—all of which pay taxes.

Adoption of the plan above would do away with parking problems and permit officials to devote their attention to the menace of traffic problems. A. MAJOWER.

Call For More Light.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How many Washingtonians know that the city is in complete darkness for a full half hour every morning? Due to an absurd lighting system here all street lights are extinguished at a quarter past 6 every morning. Beginning early in November the sund does not rise—dawn is not observable—until a quarter of 7 or a full half hour later.

As the nights grow longer and the winter months approach, this period of darkness is prolonged with the street lights still turned off at a quarter past 6 daily.

This uncivilized system is a cause of great annoyance to hundreds of Washingtonians who go to work at that hour. During the winter months the hazard of walking on slippery, icy pavements is a grave one. Pedestrians walking on the streets en route to work in utter darkness are likely victims of any motorist. No motorist can be blamed for accidents when the streets are in darkness.

It does seem that the civic-minded Post should investigate this antiquated lighting system in the District and campaign in the name of the many who must be on the streets at that time in the morning for a method whereby according to the actual time of sunrise, the extinguishing of street lights may be delayed a calculated number of minutes each day during the winter months until the days grow longer again in the spring.

A POST READER.
Washington, Nov. 30.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Georgia Avenue Business Men's Association, at a meeting held November 27, unanimously voted to thank the newspapers of Washington for their cooperation and publicity given to stamp out the numbers racket in the District by not publishing the race track pari-mutuel totals used by numbers racketeers to select their winning numbers.

Sentiment in the Scale-Pan.

"Keep the home fires burning" is more than a war-time song in the job diary of the Tennessee Valley Authority. It transpires that the farm of Ras Lindemood in the Norris Dam Basin must be abandoned before water is impounded for power purposes. The owner is willing to move, but insists that the TVA find a home site near enough at hand to enable him to "carry fire" from the old hearth to the new. Generations ago Lindemood's people came over the mountains from Virginia. Since then, it is said, the fire has never been allowed to die. If it is possible to grant the request, it may well be done.

The authority's potential opportunity to perform a graceful act recalls a New England power company's recognition some years ago of the deeply ingrained feelings of old "Grandsire Harrington" of Vermont fame. It became necessary to move a cemetery in which his mortal remains rested across a river in building a storage reservoir. For some reason that rugged Yankee had refused during his lifetime to traverse the stream by a bridge constructed in opposition to his ideas as to what was right and proper. And so, when the final transfer came, the hydroelectric engineers effected the journey by rowboat.

A concession to sentiment? Admitted; but the balance scales of business intercourse are sometimes so delicately poised that intangible elements in the transaction prove heavier than purely material expediency.

The Post Impressionist

As One Other Saw It.

Post Office, Monday.

THE citizens of a country whose government is "excessive in gifts grow excessive in asking, and they regulate their demands, not by reason, but by example . . .

"Nothing presses so hard upon a country as innovation."

Please note the quotation-marks! We aren't, here and now, setting forth our own sentiments. We didn't even select the quotations: Mrs. Louise Kidder Sparrow sent them. Besides, they first saw the light about 350 years ago.

They are the work of Michel de Montaigne. He had the misfortune to live, as you are well aware, in France instead of the U. S. A.—from 1533 to 1592.

"All great mutations," says he, "shake and disorder a state . . . The legislator of the Thurians ordained that whosoever would go about to abolish an old law, or establish a new, should present himself before the people with a halter around his neck, to the end that, if the innovation he would introduce be not approved . . . he might immediately be hanged."

There speaks the true conservative!

"The more a prince exhausts himself in giving, the poorer he grows in friends. How shall he satisfy immoderate desires, which still increase as they are fulfilled? He who has his thoughts upon taking never thinks of what he has taken. . . . Philip, seeing that his son went about by presents to gain the affection of the Macedonians, reproved him . . . after this manner: 'Hast thou a mind that thy subjects shall look upon thee as their cash-keeper?'"

And there spoke the opponent of every sort of government relief-roll!

Ourselves, we haven't dipped into this cheerful philosopher's essays for a long while. But he does sound as if he were a member of the present American opposition addressing his congressional electorate on the eve of the late lamented landslide—doesn't he?

The fact is that there was in his day a New Deal. So his dicta are worth recalling if merely as examples of historical coincidence:

"Can there be worse husbandry than to set up so many certain . . . vices against errors that are only contested and disputable? . . . We take a world already made and formed to certain customs . . . By what means soever we may have the privilege to redress and reform it anew, we can hardly writhe it from its wonted bent, but we shall break all."

That was what the Old Guard thought about the "New Frontiers" of the sixteenth century's end.

"It is too easy a thing to inculcate liberality on him who . . . will . . . practice it at the expense of others . . . If the liberality of a prince be without or discretion, I had rather he were covetous."

That is what the Old Guard thought about "The New Democracy" in 1584!

Michel de Montaigne had been a lawyer and a magistrate. He had been councelor to the Bordeaux Parliament. He knew politics—if not our pure American politics, at least the corrupt brand of his own country in his own day—and he forsook them in order to find leisure for writing about—well, about pretty much everything.

Henry of Navarre had marched upon Paris to "turn the rascals out"—and conquered what was then the whole country. He announced that France "Must choose," and every one of his New Dealers was shouting "On our way!" Right or wrong, that was the situation when Henry sought (marvelous to relate!) the assistance of Stand Pat Montaigne.

But Montaigne said he preferred to stay at home and contemplate the universe. Therefore, he stayed and contemplated. And he found that the universe included even the New Deal of that period.

He wrote about it in essays on "Custom" and "Experience." He even wrote about it when he wrote an essay on "Coaches."

So Montaigne (not James M. Beck) said: "Not according to opinion, but in truth and reality, the best and most excellent government for every nation is that under which it is maintained; its form and essential convenience depend upon custom."

So Montaigne (not Ogden Mills) said: "Whosoever shall take upon him to choose and alter usurps the authority of judging, and should look well about him, and make it his business to discern clearly the defect of what he would abolish, and the virtue of what he is to introduce."

And so Montaigne (not David A. Reed) recalled: "Plato will not consent that a man should violate the peace of his country in order to cure it, and by no means approves of a reformation that disturbs and hazards all, and that is to be purchased at the price of the citizens' . . . ruin."

Well, Well! Although Mrs. Sparrow doesn't note the fact, it was also Montaigne (not the Post-Impressionist) who wrote: "Please pardon this long letter, for I haven't time to write a short one."

Traveling in Old World Has Many Drawbacks

By David Wills.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

London.

YESTERDAY morning we left Harbin; today we are in Manchuli waiting for customs examination. We walk round the town and are promptly followed by an official on horseback. We enter the photographer's shop, and are sleuthed by an armed officer, who pretends to examine the photographs. And this in Manchuli, little gridiron of a hundred houses, half wood, half mud, whose streets change abruptly into horse tracks over open grass lands.

For the next seven days we idle our way to Moscow on the Trans-Siberian Express; two days of high moorland and fumbled mountains round Lake Baikal, two days of grain and woodland, a day through the Urals, at this point so unobtrusive that perhaps we oughtn't to mention them, and then two days of farmland to Moscow. During this week we live in a two berth compartment called soft to distinguished it from the four berth oak compartments of the hard category. In a capatalist country these would be called first and second classes, but in Russia classes have been abolished and only categories remain.

The dining car, perversely labeled Pectopah, we avoid, for its prices correspond to an exchange rate of 40 roubles to a dollar, while all we can get from the Intourist agent is 1 rouble 12 kopeks. At the stations the peasants sell roast pig and chicken, but once again Mr. Agent stands in our way. So we live for a week on canned foods brought with us from Harbin, make hot drinks with water from the samovars to which we run at every station, and even do some surreptitious cooking on an alcohol stove.

Vodka is not what I am told it was, but the Norwegians, homeward bound after a wreck in the China Sea, provide a substitute of alcohol flavored with hot tea, or hot tea flavored with alcohol, according to taste.

• • • •

EASTERN SIBERIA is in its "pioneering days," and farmers are being encouraged and forced to settle. Our train stops frequently, but we are kept to the stations and see nothing but crowds of badly clothed peasants on the platforms, men carrying their boots to prevent wear, women in old evening gowns and felt foot wrappings. Only the soldiers seem warmly dresed, robust and cheerful, and in eastern Siberia soldiering seems to be the main occupation, war material the most important train cargo. For most of the way from Vladivostock to Chita, and from Chita to Omsk, the railway is now double tracked, but from Omsk to Moscow we bump our steady 30 miles an hour on single track.

In Moscow we have five days of struggle with the perpetual inconsistency and carelessness of our Intourist Hotel. We are given meal tickets and expected to breakfast after 10, lunch after 2, and dine at midnight. The hotel clerk loses our mail, turns away our visitors, refuses to deliver messages, and in short does everything to make us feel at home in a country where apparently none is resposible and few competent. But enthusiasm is the great virtue which covers up all Russian sins.

At Stanislavsky's Theater we see "The Tsar's Bride," opera so realistic its artificiality is never in doubt. At the Kemerny Theater "The Optimistic Tragedy," enthuses its audience to perpetual support of the Communist cause, and at a third theater Russians outplay Americans at their favorite game of burlesquing America, and show their mastery of American idiom by saying "'Hullo Mr. Smith' when they mean 'Good-by.'"

• • • •

WE see the Museum of Western Art with its superb collection of Picasso and Gaugini. The new workers' settlements, suspiciously like capitalist tenements; antireligious museums which play off the one-times riches of the church against the ever-present poverty of the people, and the Red Square where the old leads from the perfect proportions of Kremlin Walls to the insanity of St. Basils' the new from the solid power of Lenin's tomb to the fiddling mediocrity of administrative offices. Communism in Russia will succeed, but it hardly could have chosen a more difficult country in which to build its first kingdom.

At the Russo-Polish border our cameras are unsealed, we change to a super-transcontinental express, chromium plated, radio serviced, Pullman carred. We pretend to feel a little freedom about the air, an absence of restraint, but we are mistaken.

In a rash moment I get out of the train with my movie to take a foot or two of the train nameplate—"Stolpce, Warsaw, Berlin, Paris"—an inoffensive enough subject, surely. But no. I am arrested and am to be imprisoned for two days while my film is developed, and there had better not be any strategic matter, or else! For an hour I struggle in an original German to prove the innocence of my actions. I am opposed by five railway policemen and two criminal investigators. I invite them to America to take films of real trains, nonstrategic.

They are not appeased. I offer to give them the film. They are adamant. But, with five seconds to spare, I am released. I dash across the tracks to my train and am reprimanded by the station master for not using the bridge to cross the tracks. I arrive at last in my compartment and am greeted by my wife with "What are you trying to do; frighten me to death?" I am subdued.

WE reach Berlin and stay quietly on Unter den Linden, or as quietly as a constant parade of troops will let us. Every day and twice on Sundays 14 brass bands and beswastikaed troops march up the road and back again to encourage the few Germans who remain civilian. The beer gardens are full, and there seems little signs of belt tightening in the name of a self-contained Fatherland. There are still a few who realize that a self-contained fatherland means a pretty empty one, but outwardly all is Hitler, and grows daily more so. The present incarnation of the All Powerful has now ordered sentries to shoulders garden spades. They're useful for farms, trenches and graves.

From Berlin we shunt for 12 hours to Hoek van Holland, 12 hours of sorting and resorting expresses at junctions until at Utrecht we are tacked on to the Rhinegold Express, and arrive at the Hook in dignity. Next morning we reach England and London. On the first day we are misdirected five times on the tubes, always of course with English politeness.

When I left England three years ago the London taxi was still the embodiment of English conservatism. But conservatism under the leadership of a one-time Socialist now masquerades as a non-partisan soul-inspiring salvationist unity going "on, on and on" and "up, up and up," and I regret to report that even the taxi is not what is was. It looks the same, I grant you, and it performs the same old antics. But the door now opens by means of a patented remote control. This, alas, is further evidence that Americanization is spreading, and the country, sir, is going to the dogs.

We comb London for an unfurnished flat to let for six months. Agents faint at our audacity. "In England, sir, we let for 21 years, broken at 14 or 7 in exceptional circumstances." At last we find one, and protest to the landlord that the price is high for a kitchen without hot water. "Hot water in the kitchen! It's not a luxury flat I'm letting you!" And in the so-called agreement he demands a rake-off of 300 pounds sterling if we run the flat as a brothel

England, say the English, can teach America dignity. But I ask you, is this a fit price to pay for dignity?

Hospitals Oppose Pupil Nurse Bill

Smaller Institutions Fight Loss of Training Schools.

Chestertown, Md., Dec. 2 (AP).—Officials of hospitals located on the Eastern Shore are preparing to fight a proposed bill to be introduced at the next Legislature which would limit the training of nurses to a few selected hospitals.

The Eastern Shore hospital authorities have held a series of meetings to discuss the situation and all members of the 1935 General Assembly are being contacted on the subject. The officials of the smaller hospitals contend that passage of the bill would work a hardship on the smaller institutions.

The smaller hospitals contend that the difference in pay for graduate nurses and for nurses in training would work a hardship on the institutions. Passage of the proposed bill, they contend, would force the smaller hospitals to employ graduates.

Library Displays French Cartoons

Lithographs by Daumier Put on Exhibit.

Lithograph cartoons by Honore Daumier lent to the Public Library by Studio House are being shown in the second-floor lobby of the central building during December, Dr. George F. Bowerman, librarian, announces.

These famous satires on French life during the middle of the nineteenth century depict political and social conditions, showing court scenes, family life, familiar figures in the streets and galleries of Paris, school life, and the beginnings of French feminism.

Land and seascapes in water color by Emily Steuart and Gertrude G. Brown, of the Western and Central High School art departments, are being shown in the sunroom at the Mount Pleasant Branch, Sixteenth and Lamont streets.

George W. Kelison Retired.

Harpers Ferry, W. Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—George W. Kelison, long employed by the Harpers Ferry Electric Light & Power Co., was retired from active service this week. He has served the company for 45 years.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

"On Our Way."

SAVANNAH, Ga., Dec. 2.—The United States Government's action in sending a lot of Kansas cows to this State for broadening has emphasized the need for a fence law. It might be called one of the problems of the new civilization, not that there were not some people who always contended that a fence law was needed. But with the arrival of the Kansas cows, a lot of other people are contending the same thing. So if the fence law is enacted by the forthcoming session of the State Legislature it will undoubtedly be credited to the new civilization rather than the old.

BARGERON

It is a problem, though. Which is to say there are two sides to it. For years a good source of revenue to Georgia farmers has been derived from letting their cows run across the highways and the railroad tracks and getting run over by an automobile or train, as the case might be. These were privately owned cows, however, and the practice was looked upon as good clean fun by the railroads and those of the motorists who survived.

• • • •

But running over Federal cows is another matter. A commission from Columbia University or one of the advanced universities which recently came down here and made a study of the subject found the morale of the people had completely changed since the arrival of the Federal cows. Whereas the hitting of a private cow tended to laughter, the hitting of a Federal cow is conducive to the jitters. This is, the commission found, because of the awe in which the Federal Government, except for a comparatively brief period, has always been held. After questioning 521 persons of average intelligence, the commission concluded that the people as a whole are afraid of a Federal agent.

"Lay off the Federal laws and don't run afoul of Uncle Sam," has been the warning to every potential law violator for years and years. "He always gets his man."

• • • •

During the period of prohibition, however, the commission found, this respect for the Federal agents waned considerably. Southern law violators came to learn then that the Federal agents were not what they had been cracked up to be. They came to command no more respect than the village constable. But with repeal of prohibition the Federal agents have regained, to a large extent, their former estate.

The commission's investigation brought out, through inquiries made of 479 persons, that the people generally read with interest the stories of the success of the Department of Justice against gangsters and the recent disclosure that the Secret Service examines turkey hash before it is served to the President.

Thus the commission arrived at the conclusion that the presence of Federal cows on the highways and railroad tracks puts the people in a very jittery state.

• • • •

It would appear from this that the thing to do is to pass a law requiring every farmer to fence his cows in. But this, at one fell swoop, would remove one of the farmer's chief sources of revenue and at the same time saddle upon him the expense of building the fences.

The commission found that the best solution lies in having either Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Ickes or Mr. Moffett, depending upon which one of them succeeds in getting the cheapest or freest money, to build the fences, and some sort of a Federal allotment can be worked out to compensate the farmer for his loss of revenue.

On the matter of whether Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Ickes or Mr. Moffett should be allowed to build the fences the commission suggests that they be required to submit sealed bids.

1933 Mark Is Passed By Wholesale Sales

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Wholesale collections maintained their previous level in November but sales showed a slight decline as compared with October, the National Association of Credit Men reported today.

However, considerable improvement over last year in both sales and collections was reported from the association's survey of 92 marketing centers. The current survey found 21 cities reporting good collections and 19 good sales, whereas a year ago only eight cities were listed as reporting good collections and sales.

No End of Books

Our Neighbors in the Americas to the South, in Political Study and Travelogues.

By Theodore Hall.

NEVER has the Monroe Doctrine been raked so thoroughly over the coals as in the pages of Gaston Nerval's "Autopsy of the Monroe Doctrine" (Macmillan, $3.50). Latin American statesmen and editors have their plain opinions of that international instrument, but we seldom hear them clearly north of the Rio Grande. There is no more excuse now for bad ears.

Nerval speaks out logically and firmly. He finds, and proves, that President Monroe's message to Congress of December 2, 1823, was never as sound a policy of dealing with our southern neighbors as Monroe-philes have thought, and that it is distinctly moth-eaten now. The doctrine of America for the Americans. Ostensibly smooth enough, turned out to be a North American egotism, in conflict with the "Bolivarian Pan-Americanism of equal rights and mutual obligations." Nerval shows that the United States misused the doctrine to extend its own hand over the Caribbean and regions south. All the corollaries and additions which have smothered the original doctrine, he says, have made it but the more one-sided and unfair, and have left it in archaic ineptitude for the modern world.

Here are facts and conclusions which may shock readers who are complacently sure that our foreign policy has always been for the best. In all friendliness, but with cool arraignment, Nerval shows otherwise. "Nerval," by the way, is the penname of Raul Diez de Medina, son and grandson of former Bolivian ministers to this country, for six years now an interpreter of Pan American affairs for newspapers and magazines here. He has given us, in the "Autopsy," a thorough study of a ticklish question—eminently readable by laymen and informative to students.

"A humble contribution to history by a hard-boiled egg," is what Capt. John H. Craige calls his second book on Haiti—"Cannibal Cousins" (Minton Balch, $2.75). Like "Black Bagdad" (Minton Balch, 1933), it is packed with anecdotes and impressions of the black republic, gained from Capt. Craige's visits there and duty as an officer in the marines and the constabulary. Few have studied the people and ways of Haiti so closely, very few know as much about Haiti's inside history, and no one has written about that country with more understanding and skill.

"Cannibal Cousins" is part opera bouffe history, part sociology. Capt. Craige tells how Smedley Butler, then major in the marines, got the President of the republic to sign the treaty inviting American intervention. The President didn't want to sign; in fact he hid from Butler in a palace bathroom. Butler merely put a ladder up against the wall, climbed into the room, and said: "Sign here!" The President did. And thus the marines came to Haiti.

And they got out of Haiti, says Capt. Craige, because the Forbes-Hoover commission recomended that that constitutionally-elected President, Louis Borno, be "persuaded" to abdicate all political power, and that Louis Roy be elected (which was done) and as a result "our prestige with the Haitians was gone; our most sacred pledges, they felt, were valueless, our political honor a joke."

Capt. Craige knew all sides of Haitian life—the language, the voodo customs, the psychology of these people. He tells of battles with the guerrilla revolutionists, of a President who put all the opposition leaders on an old battleship and then was grief-stricken when it blew up at sea. Once he met a distinguished-looking Haitian diplomat whose cousin, Craige knew, had been convicted of canibalism. Hence the title of this cheerfully frank book.

Carleton Beals can go into a country and bring most of it out with him in a vivid, all-seeing book. He has done that with Mexico and Cuba. Now he does it with Peru—"Fire on the Andes" (Lippincott, $3).

It is a gorgeous and impassioned piece of work—gorgeous for its biting description of the desert coastland and the effete and etiquette-ridden capital, Lima; of the breathlessly high central plateau and the race of "men of quartz" who live there; of the "Green Hell," the low, poisonous jungle-country in Peru's hinterland—and impassioned for its indictment of the factors which keep Peru "colonial and backward:" economic slavery, regionalism, privilege and group rule.

He tells tales of witch-doctors and bankers, of mestizo laborers and heiresses, of Peru's people from one end to the other—all pointed, all sympathetic toward the exploited. Back into history he goes to record the amazingly able rule of the Incas, and their overthrow by the gold-greedy Pizarro. Down to the present he comes with travel-talk of Cuzco and Iquitos, and examination of Peru's political movements, leaders, writers, and artists. One of these last, Jose Sabogal, did a great number of memorable illustrations for the book.

You may find Mr. Beals a bit flowery in style, but you must admire the way he has packed so much close-hand acquaintance with Peru into these pages, and passed it on to the reader.

"Gringa: An American Woman in Mexico," by Emma-Lindsay Squier (Houghton Mifflin, $3.50). A rather jolly trip through Mexico and Yucatan by a vivacious and enthusisatic observer, full of amusing anecdotes and conversations. The illustrations, photographs by John Bransby, are superb.

What with the documentation of Gaston Nerval, and the reports of all these travelers, North Americans might well gain a new perspective on themselves.

Said a Mexican woman, with a certain pity that Miss Squier did not know the elementary fact that the charcoal in the stove was made from mesquite: "That United States' then—it is not a very big town?"

Front Royal's Mayor Acts on Planning Unit

Front Royal, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.). Mayor B. J. Hillidge has announced the appointment of a city planning and zoning commission for Front Royal consisting of Town Manager L. B. Dutrow, George N Buck, member of the town council, and Mrs. W. W. Sonner, S. M. Boyd, jr., and Eugene K. Davis. An organization meeting will be held December 11.

The naming of a commission was made in accordance with an ordinance enacted by the town council under an act of the General Assembly of Virginia giving authority to create such a commission.

Hopkins and H.T.P.

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

IN THE immortal prologue in the theater in "Faust," Goethe allowed three different persons to express their respective views in a conversation on what is essential in successful drama. These three were the poet, the clown, and the manager, who of course represented idealism, humor and the box office. The first believed the true function of the theater was to elevate the souls of men; the second insisted its sole purpose was entertainment; the third said that all kinds of persons were in every audience, and that the one essential thing was to put on plays that showed a financial profit—that was anyhow what he had in mind.

• • • •

It is only occasionally in the works of dramatists like Shakespeare and Rostrand and Barrie that all three elements are united; then the result is a lasting masterpiece, as "Hamlet," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Peter Pan;" where you have poetry, humor and a perfect dramatic technique in construction.

The theatrical director necessarily insists on plays that will appeal to the public; but there are directors and directors. The director should be a man who is acquainted with the history of the drama, is familiar with classics as well as with modern successes, and whose practical judgment is enlightened by intelligence. I mean the director of a theater should be like the director of an art museum or of a conservatory of music, rather than like the manager of an exclusively commercial business. There are today such fine specimens of leaders; and among them stands out conspicuously Mr. Arthur Hopkins.

• • • •

It is so seldom that the theater manager has any good word for the professional drama critic, that I was deeply interested to see in an admirable article which Mr. Hopkins wrote for the New York Times on Sunday, November 4, a splendid tribute to the late H. T. Parker, of the Boston Transcript, who for many years was the leading play-critic in that city.

Indeed Mr. Hopkins says his chief purpose in visiting Boston was because Mr. Parker was there. Mr. Parker had a thorough command of the history of the stage in ancient and modern times; he was absolutely independent; he wrote criticisms because he loved to write them and because he loved the theater.

I may add myself that Boston was fortunate not only in having Mr. Parker as critic of plays, but also in having Philip Hale (now retired) as critic of music, who was active for nearly 50 years. I well remember his criticism of De Pachmann's piano playing and of the De Reszkes in opera in the year 1892.

• • • •

The most notable feature in Mr. Hopkin's article on the theater was his insistence that the best plays should contain the element of poetry, and he gave good illustrations. Such an insistence we should naturally expect from a poet; but it is not so common coming from an able and successful theater manager.

I hope that Mr. Hopkins will reprint his article in a more permanent form. It is a contribution to the art of the theater, and is written by one whose example throughout his distinguished career is as potent as his precepts.

5,000 Needed For CCC Camps

Enlistments to Be Accepted From Jan. 1 to Jan. 13.

Baltimore, Dec. 2 (AP).—Enrollment of replacements to fill gaps occurring in CCC camps since October 1 will be undertaken in the Third Corps Army Area from January 1 to January 13, it was announced today.

Preliminary estimates based on reports from the 177 camp commanders indicate more than 5,000 men will be required to fill the companies to full strength of 200 men. The number of replacements needed is the smallest required in any replacement program in the Third Corps Area since inauguration of the CCC.

All juniors and locally enrolled men who will complete 15 months of service during December are required to be discharged not later than December 31. They will be sent direct to their homes.

Each company commander, however, will be allowed to retain six key men: the senior foreman, the clerk, storekeeper, steward and two cooks and three others upon recommendation of the project superintendent.

Remember Your Big Waxed Doll?

Remember the beautiful waxed doll, with staring eyes and golden ringlets, that you cherished as a child? You laid her away in a trunk, when you lengthened your skirts and put up your hair . . . but you never lost your affection for her.

Interest in dolls persists long after a child has ceased to play with them. Boudoir dolls, small china dolls and dolls dressed in the costumes of foreign lands still have a strong appeal.

Now Katherine Smith of The Post's woman's staff has written a series of articles on dolls that will delight every woman. They will appear in the form of interviews with doll-makers, designers of dolls clothes, doll doctors . . . every one who makes a business of these "little men and women." Americans Will Split Big Sum in Philippines

Three Hundred to Divide Million Dollars in Gratuities Next Year.

By Vincente A. Pacis.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

Manila.

APPROXIMATELY $1,000,000 will be divided as gratuities by some 300 Americans in the service of the Philippine government when they retire upon the inauguration of the Philippine Commonwealth early next year. The bill appropriating the sum was introduced in the legislature as an adminstrative measure by Resident Commissioner Francisco Delgado before he left for Washington to assume his post in Congress. Among the beneficiaries will be the Governor General and his American staff, six justices of the supreme Court, several bureau directors and about 200 men and women in the Philippine schools.

It is very likely that a special legislation will also be passed giving Governor General Murphy a more substantial gratuity than he would get under the general bill. Belief for this arises from current talks in political circles, the tremendous popularity enjoyed by the chief executive, and the precedent established in the case of a recent secretary of finance who was given a special gratuity of 40,000 pesos on his retirement just before the finances of the government actually felt the effects of the depression.

The only difficulty seen in passing a measure giving the Governor General a gift is the fact that he himself will have to sign his own bill. In the Philippines, however, few things are impossible when the will to do is present. Special legislation is not unknown, and resident commissioners to Congress are selected from members of the legislature in direct violation of the present organic act. For the first time, the legislature may also appropriate money by concurrent resolution.

THE $1,000,000 provided for in the general gratuity bill will be apportioned to the Americans in the government on the basis of the highest salaries they have received and on the length of their service. Under this system of apportionment, some of them will retire with little fortunes. Dr. Luther Bewley, director of education, will receive approximately $25,000, and Justice George Malcolm of the supreme court, about $32,000.

When the Philippine government was reorganized about a year ago, Filipino officials and employes let out were given gratuities at the rate of a month's salary for every year's service, but only 12 years' service, or a year's salary, was allowed as maximum. In the American gratuity bill no maximum limit is set, the retiring official drawing as many months' salary as he has years of service, the highest salary ever received being used as basis. A few of those affected have to their credit 30 years or more of service. Some of them started with little pay but are now drawing $500 or more monthly. The justices of the supreme court get $1,000 each a month. Any justice who is a 30-year man will therefore get $30,000.

It is not of course taken for granted that every American in the government will retire upon the inauguration of the commonwealth. Some of the American officials are in fact so popular that if they were to aspire for posts under the commonwealth, whether elective or appointive, they would not be disappointed. Nevertheless, the appointing power in the Philippines now being exercised by the President of the United States in the case of justices of the Supreme Court, the vice governor and the insular auditor, and by the governor general in the case of all other appointive officials from justices of the peace to cabinet members will be transferred to the Filipino chief executive. Given the nationalistic complex of average politics, however, it is expected that practically all the Americans in the government, with the possible exception of the few purely technical men, will be replaced by Filipinos.

THERE is a minority among the Americans affected which insists that the Federal Government should itself take care of the Americans in the Philippines. This insistence is based mainly on the belief that Congress could afford to set for the purpose very much more than a mere $1,000,000. Nevertheless, the minority folk are mostly the newer men in the service who would get the smallest shares in either case, but who of course feel sure that the smallest share in Washington would always be much larger than its counterpart in Manila.

Filipino officials, including the legislative leaders and the secretary of finance, insist, however, that the Philippine government perform the function of gratitude to these Americans, since it is to the Philippines that they have rendered service. This attitude is further strengthened by a recent incident in the constitutional convention now in session in Manila. When a group of delegates insisted on writing into the preamble of the constitution a clause expressing the Philippines' gratitude to America, the proposition was defeated under the leadership of the chairman of the most powerful committee, that on sponsorship. So startled was every one that even the president of the convention found himself constrained to declare that the defeat of the clause did not reflect the sentiment either of the convention or of the people and that, at all events, the preamble as it then stood was not in its final form.

It appears from present indications that the Filipinos will not be lacking in both material and idealistic gratitude to America. The Americans in the government service will be taken care of modestly but practically for life, while the Philippine constitution, in its final form, will not forget the liberating role of America in the islands.

"Lissen, the game is between Alabama and Stanford."

"Standford who?"

"Just Standford, that's all. By the way, what do you think of the All-America selections this year?"

"I don't know. Did anybody put that Louisiana Senator on it?"

Wife Begs to See Man Who Shot 2 Children

The father, Heber Westover, 28, insisted he shot the children yesterday "on the spur of the moment" because he "couldn't stand" the arguments with his wife.

Two Debutantes Are Presented At Teas Here

Christine Long and Mary Ellen Corby Make Bows to Society.

Yesterday afternoon Capital society attended two lovely debut teas. The United States Ambassador to Italy and Mrs. Breckenridge Long, presented their daughter, Miss Christine Long, to society at a tea at Grasslands, which was attractively decorated with autumn flowers and leaves as well as the many bouquets of flowers sent the debutante from all over the country.

Mrs. Long wore a handsome gown of black velvet shot with gold threads and the debutante wore a gown of tangerine chiffon with a full skirt trimmed with bands of brown feathers. Brown feathers also were used on the collar of the bodice. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet.

Assisting Mrs. Long at the tea table were Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, Mrs. William Stanley, Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner, Mrs. Wallach Merriam, Mrs. Bruce Kremer, Mrs. Gist Blair. Mrs. George T. Mayre, Mrs. Arthur O'Brien, Mrs. James F. Mitchell, Mrs. Randall Hagner, Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney, Mrs. John W. Davidge, Mrs. Charles Henderson, Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, and Mrs. Marshall Langhorne.

Assisting the debutante were Miss Martha Davidge, Miss Estherbelle McHarg, Miss Mary Jane Stanley, Miss Emelen Knight Davies, Miss Ruth Sowers, Miss Marianna Dunn, and Miss Stellita Stapleton.

Miss Long, with her mother, was presented at the Court of St. James last spring and earlier in the season, she was presented by her mother to Queen Elena. of Italy—there being no such courts at the Quirinal as at Buckingham Palace.

The other large debut tea yesterday afternoon was that of Miss Mary Ellen Corby, who was presented to society by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Karl W. Corby, in their beautiful home on the Rockville pike.

Mrs. Corby, wore a smart gown of a brown velvet skirt with the bodice of gold lame and a lame jacket trimmed with mink. She wore a corsage of white orchids. The debutante wore a gown of white satin shot with silver, which was made on long lines with a drop shoulder line which formed a cowl in the back. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of talisman roses and lilies of the valley.

Assisting Mrs. Corby were Mrs. Charles Corby, grandmother of the debutante, and Mrs. Edward H. Droop, another grandmother of the Misses Corby; Mrs. Carl Droop, Mrs. Thilman Hendrick, Mrs. John Oliver La Gorce, Mrs. Thomas Bones, Mrs. Clarence Dodge, Mrs. William Kerkam, Mrs. Charles Tompkins.

Assisting the debutante were Miss Alice Fleming, Miss Frida Frazer, Miss Emily Maddox, Miss Mary Tyler MacCormack, Miss Anne Clarkson, Miss Dorothy Green, Miss Bambie McKenna and Miss Barbara Walters, of Allentown, Pa., guest of Miss Corby for several days.

The house was decorated with autumn flowers and leaves. On the tea table was an attractive center piece of violets, talisman roses and lilies of the valley resembling an old-fashioned bouquet with the lace frill around the outside.

Mr. and Mrs. Ward Melville and their daughter, Miss Margarett Melville, and their sons, Frank and David, of Old Field, Long Island, N. Y., are guests at the Shoreham, having come to join their daughter, Miss Ruth Melville, who attends Miss Madeira's school.

Nichols-Meeker Wedding Is Held At Long Beach

Long Beach, Calif., Dec. 2 (AP).—Miss Eleanor Hyland Nichols, daughter of Capt. Newton Lord Nichols, commander of the U. S. S. Argonne, and Mrs. Nichols, and Mr. William Painter Meeker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Meeker, of Miami, Fla., were married here last night.

The ceremony was performed by Lieut. C. H. Mansfield, Chaplain Corps, U. S. N., in the ballroom of the Villa Riviera at 6 o'clock before an improvised altar banked with palms and white chrysanthemums.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Whitley, of Los Angeles, was maid of honor and Mr. Phil Delany, of Miami, Fla., a fraternity brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

The ushers were Lieut. Clarence Pike, Lieut. Walter M. Foster, Lieut. Basil Rittenhouse and Lieut. Gill Richardson.

After the ceremony a reception was held for 200 guests.

Mr. Meeker and his bride sailed last night on the S. S. Santa Rosa for a honeymoon in Panama and Havana, Cuba, whence they will fly to Miami. They will be at home in Miami after January 1.

Back-Stage Party By Players Club

Short Play to Be Presented Wednesday Evening.

The Players Club of Washington will entertain at its first "back-stage" party of the present season, on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, when a short play will be presented under the direction of Mr. Kent Dyer, with a cast of players including Miss Jane Simonds, Miss Shirley Rowe, Mr. J. Lloyd Jackson and Mrs. George Wilcox.

The committee on reception of guests who will be friends of the members of the club, will be headed by Miss Evelyn Schweizer, vice president of the club, assisted by Miss Anna Martin, Miss Phyllis Speich, Miss Willoughby Patton, Mr. Terry MacPhearson and Mr. Wilbur Tubbs. Assisting Miss Nancy Haas at the punch table will be Miss Marjorie Beall, Miss Erna Bishop, Mr. Ted Freter and Mr. Henry Bradford.

Mr. Jack Hare will be in charge of the setting and lighting of the stage and the costumes for the play will be under the direction of Mrs. J. Lloyd Jackson and Miss Alice Louise Hunter.

Beginning Wednesday December 12, the Players Club will organize a group among the members, for the study of voice and diction with Lucy Ann Rogers, who is one of the guest directors of the club since its organization last year, by Mrs. Edit H. Hunter and Miss Bess Davis Schreiner.

Mr. William P. Kilgore is the president, Miss Gertrude Lanman secretary and Mr. George Wulcox treasurer of the Players Club for 1934-35.

Miss Randolph Richardson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick D. Richardson, accompanied by Mr. Robert McCandlish, will go to Baltimore today to attend the first Bachelors Cotillion.

Miss Odum Weds Mr. Howard Cash

Nuptials Here Thursday at Nativity Church.

The marriage of Miss Marguerite Claire Odum, daughter of Lieut. Burleigh M. Odum, U. S. A., retired, and Mrs. Odum, of Washington, to Mr. Howard James Cash, son of Mr. Oscar C. Cash, retired chief inspector of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Mrs. Cash, took place Thursday morning in Nativity Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Lawrence A. McGlove.

The bride, who was escorted by her father, wore a gown of ivory moire, made with a tailored jacket and loose sleeves. The skirt gathered to fullness in the back and terminated in a train. She wore a close fitting hat of gold cloth and gold slippers. Her bouquet was of pale yellow roses combined with lilies of the valley.

Mr. Robert Houston was best man. The ushers were Mr. Carl Bernard Odum, brother of the bride, and Mr. James Richit.

Ceremony Is Performed in Toronto; Couple Will Live in Spain.

A wedding of interest to Washington, which took place in Toronto, Canada, on Saturday afternoon, is that of Miss Anna Mildred Hatch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Hatch, who became the bride of Mr. Thomas Polleys Krock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Krock, of New York and Washington. The ceremony was performed in the home of the bride's parents, with the Rev. Henry Carr, uncle of the bride, officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white velvet, made on fitted lines, with a row of tiny buttons drawing the bodice in tightly at the waist. The sleeves were long and came to a point over her hands, in which she held a prayer book. From a pearl coronet a flowing veil fell below her knees, while her train was very long. She also carried a sheaf of calla lilies.

The maid of honor, Miss Evelyn McBean, wore a gown of turquoise velvet with a matching hat and she carried violets. The best man was Mr. Carr Hatch.

Following the ceremonies there was a reception and the young couple were assisted in receiving the guests by Mrs. Hatch, mother of the bride, who wore a gown of beige lace, with a brown velvet hat and she wore a corsage of brown orchids. Mrs. Krock, mother of the bridegroom, also assisted in receiving.

The house was decorted with a profusion of white chrysanthemums, tall tapers, plams and ferns.

Mr. Krock and his bride left later for a wedding trip to Bermuda, the latter wearing a smart gray woolen ensemble with a hat to match. The couple will return to Toronto for the Christmas holidays, after which they will sail for Madrid, Spain, where they will make their home.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Noyes have arrived in Washington from their home in East Islip, Long Island, and are at the Carlton for a short time.

Smart Street Attire Noticed On Debutantes and Mothers

Now that December is really here social life is fast becoming quite hectic indeed. In addition to the ever increasing number of teas, luncheons, dinners, suppers and balls there are the necessary trips to toy lands, jewelry counters and gift shops that are clamoring for attention. A trip down Connecticut avenue or F street finds nearly all of one's friends out on the same errands and the shopping has to be postponed a moment or two for a short chat.

Miss Silvine Clagett and Miss Margaret McMullen recently stopped at the Admiral for luncheon and to talk about the various doings in the debutante set. Miss Clagett had on a frock of dark blue crepe trimmed with a triangular scarf of white. Her small felt turban was of dark blue as were her kid pumps. Her coat of navy blue cloth was trimmed with black caracul.

Wears Bolero Jacket of Mink.

Miss McMullen was also in dark blue. Her suit, of lightweight woolen, was made on tailored lines with a three-quarter length coat with which she wore a bolero jacket of mink. Her large beret-hat was of dark blue and her ties and accessories matched.

Mrs. Walter Kilbourne, walking down Connecticut avenue the other morning, was smarly attired in French blue, with a hat of the same shade. Her blouse was of dark blue taffeta as were her gloves, shoes and accessories.

A mother and daughter who enjoy their strolls together are Mrs. Walter Mangum and Miss Anne Mangum. Recently they were on the Avenue. Mrs. Mangum had on a black knitted wool frock over which she wore a short beaver jacket. Her hat and accessories were of black. Miss Mangum was wearing a suit of green rough tweed with a small hat of the same material. Her shoes and gloves were brown and as a bit of color she carried a bright red purse.

Deb's Mother Smartly Clad.

Mrs. Walter Harrison, whose daughter, Miss Nancy Harrison, is one of this season's debutantes, was seen recently near Dupont Circle. She was wearing a coat of hunter's green trimmed with black caracul over a frock of black crepe. Her smart little tricorne was of black velvet and had a perky green quill. Mrs. Harrison's slippers, bag and gloves were of black kid.

Mrs. Louis Caldwell and her young daughters, Barbara, are often seen going places together. The other afternoon they attended the matinee at the National Theater. Mrs. Caldwell was attired in smartly severe black with a handsome silver fox scarf. Little Miss Caldwell was quite British in her tweed coat and matching hat with which she wore brown shoes and white gloves.

Capital Society Plans to Attend Kreisler Recital

Many Make Reservations for Concert Here Tomorrow.

Another brilliant society audience is expected at Constitution Hall tomorrow afternoon for the recital of Fritz Kreisler, the distinguished Austrian violinist, who will make his only appearance this season in Washington as the second attraction of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey's Tuesday afternoon recital series at the D. A. R. Auditorium. This is the music series that was recently opened with the appearance of Grace Moore and her associates of the Metropolitan Quartet.

Mr. Kreisler will play, for the first time in Washington, Erich Wolfgang Korngold's violin music from the "Much Ado About Nothing" suite, with Mr. Carl Lamson at the piano. This suite was written to Shakespeare's play of the same name by the brilliant young composer of Mme. Jeritza's Metropolitan Opera success of some seasons ago, "The Dead City." There are four movements to the suite, entitled "Maiden in Burial Chamber," "March of the Watch," "Garden Scene" and "Masquerade."

Other Selections.

In addition to the Korngold suite, Mr. Kreisler will play Haendal's A major sonata, the prelude and gavotte from Bach's partita in E major, the Mendelssohn E minor concerto, two of his own arrangement of Anton Dvorak's Slavonic dances and Kreisler's own arrangement of Manuel de Falla's Spanish dance from "La Vida Breve."

Among those who have taken boxes and orchestra reservations for tomorrow's concert are:

Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Copley Amory, Miss Moira Archbold, Mrs. W. H. Baldwin, Mrs. Frank S. Bright, Miss Ruth Brown, Mrs. John C. Breckenridge, Mrs Paul Bastedo, Mrs. E. V. Bookmiller, Col. H. H. Baily, Princess Cantacuzene Grant, Mrs. J. Edward Chapman, Mrs. Charlotte Lippitt, Miss Mabel Crissey, Mrs. M. Webster Dawley, Miss C. K. Ditto, Mrs. George Eckels, Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin, Mrs. Carl Droop, Mrs. Tod Ford, Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Fletcher, Mrs. Edward M. Droop, Mrs. B. D. Foulois, Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, Miss Janet D. Frost, Mrs. F. B. Gibson, Mrs. Pierre Gaillard and Mrs. Robert Giles.

Other Reservations

Mrs. Keith Merrill, Mrs. Neal A. Melick, Mrs. James R. Mann, Mrs. George Morris, Mr. H. N. Moore, Mrs. I. S. Miller, Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Mrs. George Hewitt Meyers, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Miller, Mrs. Eugene Meyer, jr., Mrs. George Newgarden, Mrs. A. K. Payne, Mr. S. M. Pilson, Mrs. John L. Proctor, Mrs. Ralph Richards, Mr. William K. Ryan and Mrs. Alexander Rodgers.

Miss Richards to Talk On Events in Europe

Miss Janet Richards at her lecture this morning at 11 o'clock at the Willard on "Affairs Political and International" will include special mention of the "cessation of hostilities" in Europe due to the royal marriage; the new Japanese gesture for peace at the London conference, and the growing movement for the restoration of Alfonso in Spain. Home affairs will be reviewed also. These Monday talks are clarified by the use of large maps.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:
And still another industrious, energetic student! I met Florence Ashurst for the first time the other day and learned shortly thereafter that she attends G. W. and spends her days digging into formidable volumes—but in the evenings the books are tucked away and are replaced with gay satins, lames—rhinestone bangles and soft music.

Dolly Fleming looked very chic indeed at the Mayflower the other evening. Her gown was of turquoise blue, some kind-of-crepe and gave her hair and skin the loveliest golden tone.

A very tiny person is Janet Harrison, who in a green frock and bundled up to her little chin with a green feather boa (quite reminiscent of the leis in the land of the Hulas), was dancing with a very tall dark person the other evening.

Jewell V. Cummins Is a Holiday Bride

Wed to William J. Powers at Church in Roanoke.

Miss Jewell Vincent Cummins, of Washington, daughter of Mrs. Grace Ogush and the late Mr. Frank Pierce Cummins, became the bride of Mr. William Joseph Powers, son of Mrs. John Thomas Powers, of Petersburg, Va., on Thanksgiving Day, at Our Lady of Nazareth Church, Roanoke, Va., with the Rev. James B. Gilsenan officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Mr. Walter Keeble Smith, jr., wore a white moire tunic over a skirt of black velvet and a large picture hat. She carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Walter Keeble Smith, jr., wore a gold-colored ensemble and a corsage of orchids and lilies of the valley. The best man was Mr. James Thomas Powers, of Petersburg, Va.

A small reception followed the ceremony at the Patrick Henry Hotel. Later Mr. Powers and his bride left for a wedding trip and upon their return to Washington will make their home at 2440 Sixteenth street.

Mr. Thomas Harper Chapell, of Drakes Branch, Va., announces the marriage of his daughter, Miss Grace Carolyn Chapell, to Mr. Charles Henry Dannettel, of Washington, on Saturday in Washington.

Metal Spheres Run Stale Air From Closets

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THERE IS MORE than the moth problem to closet hygiene. While most of the publicity goes to the sneaking little insects who hatch the eggs that produce the larvae that feed on our fox neckpiece or woolen jumper, stale air is a major factor. In the first place, the moths like it, so we don't. In the second place, it gives our clothes a musty aroma that perfume is unable to hide. It is unpleasant and unsanitary and almost impossible to combat. At least, it was until along came a young lady from Vienna who took closet problems very seriously and determined to tackle them with a bit of research.

She found that Government scientists recommend a substance, "paradichlorobenzene," for scaring away moths. That was step No. 1. The next was more difficult. Modern life being what is is, and modern dwellings what they are, the luxury of windows in a closet is overlooked. How was she to get fresh, fragrant air into a closet sealed with three walls and a thick door?

Her solution is an attractive "breathing sphere" which purifies the air, gives out enough "paradichlorobenzene" to put a crimp in moths, and fills the closet with a fresh woodsy odor. In fact, if you hang one of the handsome accessories on a hook you get the same effect as if you'd opened a window on a fragrant pine woods.

A Zipper Muff.

So far there hasn't been enough cold weather to make us appreciate muffs except from the appearance angle. Any time now when icy winds begin to bite we'll be glad to have one of these cozy hand protectors.

You can buy the muff foundation, complete even to wrist bracelet and zipper fastening in the top for very little. Cover this with fur or fabric to match a suit and you'll be sure of a modish accessory.

With a muff like this you'll not even need a purse, for the zipper in the top conceals a slit pocket for compact, lipstick, change, etc.

Manicure Cases.

When you first see the attractive red, blue and black leather cases you think they're little doll hat boxes and you're sorry you're too grown up for such toys. But when you open them up you find they're manicure cases and exactly what you need in the way of a personal belonging or an unusual gift.

In the top there are Emory boards, a nail file and scissors. In the deep, round case itself are two polishes, a remover and a brittle nail cream.

"Toe Tie" Invented.

Tired, aching feet and burning blisters, which have so long been accepted as a result of Christmas shopping, are altogether unnecessary, declares a young woman who has done more than a usual amount of "foot study."

The fourth toe, she says, is known as the key to foot. It has fewer ligaments, but most troublesome nerves, and is frequently the cause of foot weariness. In order to help this fourth toe and give a "toe tie."

This fastens around that sensitive toe, keeps your bones in proper balance and prevents undue pressure on the nerves.

Town Toppers.

Town toppers are the perfect swagger felts. They combine a masculine dash with feminine flattery to give you a real chic.

Because they're made of a fine fur felt they wear for ages in all kinds of weather and still look good as new. You buy them with a crease down the center of the crown, but you can change them to suit yourself. As long as you have a town topper, you can rest assured that changing hat styles won't affect you. For that reason they're a real economy in hats.

Modernistic Lamps.

Chromium is ingeniously used in the design of some brand-new modernistic lamps, priced at $1 in a local store.

Imagine one large chromium ball cut exactly in half. The top portion is used as the shade, the bottom part as the base. In between is the stalk of the lamp for the bulb and the switch.

These inexpensive little lamps are attractive for a hall or stair landing or they're ideal for a desk, as the shade may be twisted to focus the light as you please.

"Personality Bracelets."

Personality invades the bracelet field. A local store has some sterling silver "personality bracelets" consisting of link chains and silver tabs for initials. They make unusual gifts and cost very little. The engraving is free of charge.

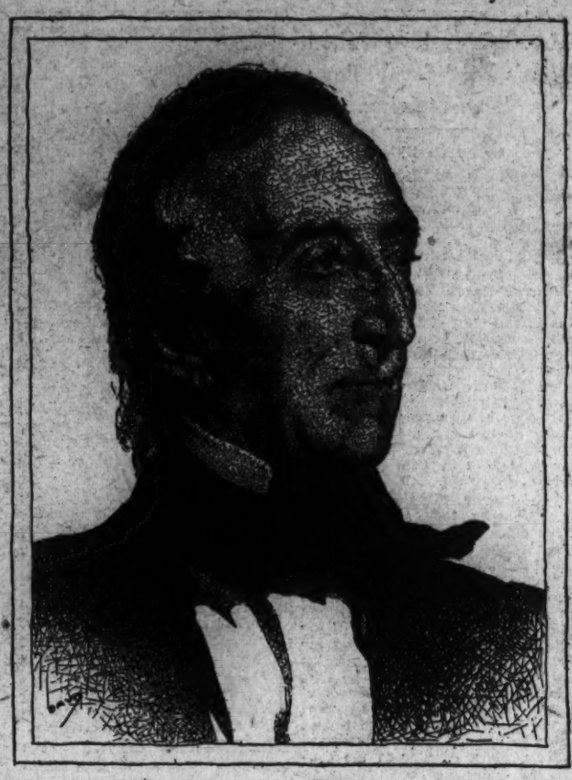
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Robert Tyler—Priscilla Cooper



The romance of Priscilla Cooper, Richmond, (Va.) belle, and Robert Tyler, son of President John Tyler, led the sprightly Priscilla to the White House. During the administration of her father-in-law, young Mrs. Tyler presided over the executive mansion, relieving her invalid mother-in-law of social duties.

Charm and Simplicity of President's 'In-Law' Won Capital Society.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

IN THE GLAMOROUS story of White House chatelaines, these ladies of the Executive Mansion have occasionally been daughters or daughters-in-law of Presidents, and their history is cherished together with that of the wives of the Chief Executives.

One of these fair young chatelaines, writing to a beloved sister, set down this glimpse of Washington society in her day:

"I see so many great men and so constantly that I can not appreciate the blessing. The fact is, when you meet them in everyday life, you forget they are great men, at all, and just find them the most charming companions in the world, talking the most delightful nonsense, especially the almost awful lobking Mr. Webster, who entertains me with the most charming gossip."

The writer was sprightly Priscilla Cooper Tyler, wife of Col. Robert Tyler, eldest son of President John Tyler. Washington Irving once called her the "fascinating Fairie" and she was the "Sophy Sparkle" of his Salmagundi. She came rightly by her charm, for her mother was a great belle, the daughter of Maj. Fairlie, a Revolutionary hero and a first citizen of New York City. Her father was Thomas A. Cooper, the eminent tragedian, and little Priscilla had been brought up in the love of and environment of the fine arts.

Wife an Invalid.

When President Tyler came to the White House he brought with him an invalid wife, the first Mrs. Tyler, who had been Letitia Christian, of Richmond, Va., the daughter of a leading family of the Old Dominion. Their eldest son, Robert Tyler, was a splendid young fellow, literary in his tastes, who found his chief joy in the society of authors and artists.

While in Richmond on a visit several years before he had met the dashing Priscilla Cooper. To see her was to love her, according to tradition, and Robert Tyler proved to be no exception to this rule.

He proved equally attractive to Priscilla. He resembled greatly in person and poetic inclination the poet Shelley, then having a tremendous vogue in the United States. He was also a versifier of parts, and he wooed the fair Priscilla with poems indited to her graces, in the manner of love-sick swains of all generations. In less than a year they were engaged, and before John Tyler came to Washington as the new Chief Executive wedding bells had pealed out for them.

Washington society heard with anticipation the news of the lovely young bride of the President's son. It knew, too, of Mrs. Tyler's ill health, and that her place as White House hostess would have to be taken by her daughter-in-law and her daughter, Elizabeth. Young Mrs. Tyler was well qualified for her new duties. A contemporary commentator declared: "Educated with great care, her splendid natural qualities of mind were so developed as to dignify and adorn the highest station. She had been accustomed from childhood to the best society, and among her mother's intimate friends were the Hosacks, the Livingstons, the McEvers, the Pauldings and many distinguished families of New York."

Coached by President.

As the Tyler family, children and in-laws left for the White House the President-elect gave them their final instructions as to their behavior in that exalted station. Speaking directly to his daughter Elizabeth, and his daughter-in-law, Priscilla, he said: "To you, Priscilla and Elizabeth, it is, I trust, hardly necessary to say, that, as upon you will presently devolve the duty of presiding at the White House, you should be equal and untiring in your affabilities to all; and you should remember that nothing betrays a little soul so much as the exhibition of airs or assumptions under any circumstances."

Young Mrs. Tyler quickly became a favorite in Washington society. She possessed great conversational powers, with a playful humor and readiness at repartee, which made her society fascinating. She had, too, a tender heart, "open as day to melting charity" and she became the confidante of her mother-in-law, Mrs. Tyler, whose memory is cherished for her kindness to the poor of Washington.

Fainted at Dinner.

In one of her letters to a friend, Priscilla Tyler tells of the excitement she caused at a Cabinet dinner when, for the first time in her life, "she fell back in a fainting fit." "Mr. Webster" she continued in the letter, "who was sitting next to me, picked me up in his arms, and took me away from the table; and Mr. Tyler (her husband) with his usual impetuosity, deluged us both with ice water, ruining my lovely new dress, and, I am afraid, producing a decided coldness between himself and the Secretary of State. I had to be taken to my room, and poor Mr. Webster had to be shaken off, dried and brushed, before he could resume his place at the table."

Meantime Robert Tyler was enjoying the society of the literati. Through a writer here, Frederick A. Thomas, he became interested in Edgar Allan Poe, and endeavored to place him in the United States customs office at Philadelphia. But John Tyler was not in favor of the dispensing of political plums by his son, and the poet did not get the Government job.

When Dickens came to Washington he was charmed with Robert and his fair wife. When Irving and Dickens were both present at a levee, the east room was packed with 3,000 guests all eager to see the literary lions and to comment on the loveliness and graces of Mrs.

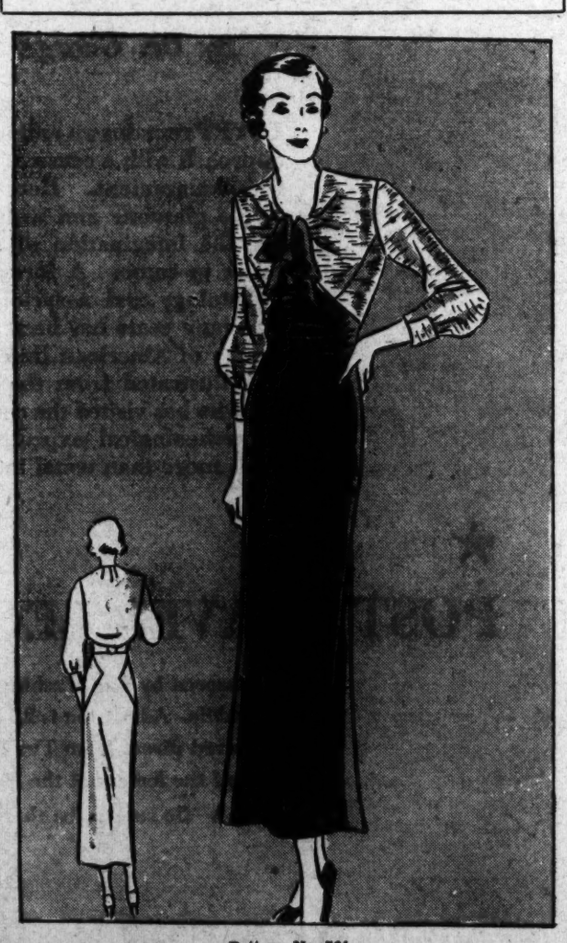
Robert Tyler, who was presiding over the event for her father-in-law.

A juvenile fancy ball was given by Mrs. Robert Tyler in the White House on the third birthday anniversary of her daughter. The child was dressed as a fairy with silver wand, gossamer wings and a diamond star upon her forehead, holding the hand of her young mother, while she received her guests. The junior set was out in force, all in fancy dress. At the supper table opposite the tiny hostess sat Dolly Madison, venerable as to age, but sparkling yet in wit, a picturesque figure in black velvet, fancy turban and the inevitable silver snuff box.

Time passed, the first Mrs. Tyler died, a few years later John Tyler married again, and the Tylers left the White House, but the memory of Priscilla Cooper Tyler and her romance with her dashing literary husband still lingers about its classic halls, and she is not forgotten where once she had reigned as a veritable queen.

Perfect In-Between Frock For Socially Active Women



Pattern No. 764.

THE woman with the mature figure sometimes has difficulty in finding that perfect in-between frock. A dress which is dressed up enough for afternoons, but which still has the dignity which makes it suitable to her type of figure. Here it is. That blouse-top is a light color, or, better still, in shimmering lame, is a grand trick to make the hips seem small.

The sizes are 36 to 48. In size 40 the dress requires 1⅝ yards of 39-inch material for the blouse; 2½ yards of 39-inch material for the skirt, girdle and tie.

Oyster Dishes Are Healthful Diet Variation

By Dorothea Duncan.

WASHINGTON housewives should take advantage of the fact that some of the finest oysters in the world grow right in their backyards. Until late spring the choicest oysters will be available in markets here.

Persons who have been reared in the oyster regions prefer their oysters to be opened and served raw, immediately after they are shucked. Improper cooking of an oyster does much to detract from the flavor.

For example, many women, inexperienced in making oyster stew, will throw away the oyster liquor and use only milk, or milk and water, in preparing the stew. Half the flavor has been discarded and the result is a very poor dish. Oyster stew is the most simple oyster dish to prepare. Here is the way the "Eastern Sho'" people do it: Butter, oysters and oyster liquor are placed in a frying pan or skillet. The liquor is not allowed to boil, but simmers ever so gently until the oysters start to curl at the edges. The heat is turned off and the stew is seasoned and served immediately or hot milk is added after the seasoning. Some persons prefer their stew with milk, others without.

Few housewives know the very recently discovered dietary importance of the oyster. This food provides the body with calcium and phosphorous, iodine, iron and copper and vitamins, which properties, in the order mentioned, build good bones and teeth, keep the thyroid functioning properly, give good blood and in general promote growth and good health.

Dinner Menu.

Grapefruit on the Half Shell
Escalloped Oysters
Baked Idaho Potatoes
Buttered Kale
Lettuce With Russian Dressing
Johnny Cake
Tea With Lemon Milk (for childen)

Escalloped Oysters.

1 pint oysters 6 tablespoons butter or other fat
2 cups soft bread crumbs Salt and pepper
¼ cup milk

Oil a baking dish; put in a layer of crumbs, then a layer of oysters, butter or other fat in little pieces, salt and pepper. Repeat, ending with a layer of crumbs, with small pieces of fat dotted over them. Do not have more than two layers of oysters. Moisten with milk and oyster liquor mixed together. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees-400 degrees F.) until brown, and serve in same dish.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE.

MARY jumped up from her chair. "Snap out of it, Dick. In a few days every one in town will know what I'm telling you tonight. Once it's on the street, all the agencies are going to start soliciting us," she said. "We're planning to spend a lot of money. This one account alone could carry you for a while. And it would attract others of the same grade."

Dick turned away. "It's awfully good of you, Mary," he said heavily. "If you had come to me with this—a little while back—even six weeks ago—I should have gone for it with everything in me. And I'd have got it. But to prepare any such campaign—and there's always a gamble—I'd have to spend money. I haven't got it. And—now I don't feel the drive any more."

"You have no right to talk that way," Mary cried passionately. Just because Jocelyn's let you down——"

She Wanted to Help.

"Leave her out, Mary."

"I wont leave her out," Mary rushed on. "Not if she ruins your life, makes a coward of you. When I first met you, you were one of the keenest, most vital men I've ever known. I can't bear to see you defeated—if it's a question of expenses, I'll find the money—as a partner."

"That's out." Dick's teeth clicked out the words.

"Why? Because I'm a woman? Because I care for you? Well, I'll tell you something now." Mary's words rose over the leaden burden in her heart. "I couldn't go on caring for a man who won't help himself or let any one else help him. That's a form of pride I don't understand."

Dick's eyes were somber. "There's one thing you needn't worry about. You'll get every penny I owe you. But I won't take any more help from you—either money or pull."

"It's too bad you're refusing a chance to get on your feet again just because I happen to be advertising manager of the company that could use you," Mary said angrily. "If your stuff weren't good, I couldn't do a thing——"

So Mary Left.

"I've accepted enough from you," Dick said obstinately. "Anyway, I'm not even sure I'll go on in the advertising business. I may try my hand at something else."

Mary shook her head. "You'll never try anything else. Not with this spirit, Dick. This is the crisis of your life. Here you are, sunk in debt, and some one comes to you—it just happens to be me—offering you a real break. You sold yourself to Mr. Finch at lunch that day. You sold something you wanted to sell then—and he's ready to buy now."

"I've tried and tried." Mary's voice trembled. "Now I see it's no use. Quickly she moved to the door, pulled it open. "I could have stood not being lovers. But I'm afraid now we can't even be friends. Think it over." On a little gasp she was gone, running down the stairs and out of the house.

While in Paris.

Mrs. Oliver Keene's car waited rather conspicuously on the quiet Rue Leopold Robert off the Boulevard Montparnasse, while Rita went in to the modest pension where Jocelyn had fled after Fontainebleau.

It was found to be very unpleasant, seeing Jocelyn again, yet it might be more unpleasant to have her as an enemy.

Fontainebleau was a blunder, a dreadful performance. Jocelyn flouncing off to Paris by train. Boris leaving without a word. And Ollie a problem now. In all his easy-going existence, Rita had never known him so bitter.

Her delicate nostrils quivered at the vague smell of onions wafted through the halls of the stuffy pension. How could Jocelyn endure it?

But Jocelyn would have endured anything rather than to go back to the intolerable intrigues that Rita breathed as her daily air. As it was she had paid too high a price for luxury and Rita's favors. Now that was finished, and now, alone, she must face the prospect of being stranded without money in Paris unless she turned to Dick for help.

When Rita was announced, Jocelyn's first instinct was to refuse to see her. There was certainly a motive to her coming here. "But she can't hurt me any more," Jocelyn assured herself.

So she opened the door of her room and stood back with a cold "Hello, Rita."

"I hope you don't mind my coming." Rita looked around with the air of a swan on strange waters.

When there was no answer, Rita went on determinedly—"I don't suppose you have any use for me, Lynn?"

"Not the slightest," Jocelyn answered cooly. It gave her a sense of release to feel that she need no longer be tactful or considerate.

Always Scheming.

"You make it very difficult, Lynn." Rita took out her slender ivory holder and fitted in a cigarette. "Of course, I know you know Boris expected to find me in that room. I thought he'd go at once——"

"You can never leave situations alone, can you?" Jocelyn said wearily. "I'm only sorry you had to drag Ollie into it all. I'm rather fond of Ollie." She turned her fine eyes on Rita. "But it's over now. I've been an expensive guest, and you have been a most expepsive hostess. Let's drop it——"

"I'm quite willing to," Rita said as if she were accepting an olive branch. She hesitated, her nails flashing crimson as she waved her cigarette holder at the room. "What are you going to do? You can't posibly stay here, my dear——"

Pioneer in Fancy Doll Dress Field Finds Proper Clothes For Toys Exert Powerful Influence on Child's Habits

Aid to Taste, Mrs. Goldman Tells Mothers

Now Thriving Industry All Started From Desire to Create.

The frills that trim the baby doll's cap, the tailored frock the little girl doll wears, the millions of garments that clothe the country's millions of dolls—who makes them? Obviously, doll dress designing should be a woman's job, and it is a woman's foresight and good taste that makes doll clothes what they are today.

This is the first of a series of articles on dolls.

By Katherine Smith.

Molly-e's Doll Outfitters, Inc., started with a doll frock from Paris, a Kewpie seen on the Atlantic City boardwalk, and Mrs. Mollye Goldman's ingenuity. Today her company in Philadelphia manufactures clothes for leading doll firms. Many of the dainty dresses on department store dolls are of Mrs. Goldman's inspiration.

The Paris dress—"When I was about 10 years old," says Mrs. Goldman, "I saw some of these fine little dresses in a toy department. I was amazed at their sheer beauty and decided that I must own some. So I saved my money until I was able to buy a dress of my very own. I had lots of dolls—we had traveled extensively, and in every county my mother bought a doll for me. Today I have a large collection.

"I loved dolls and pretty dresses for them. I learned to sew, quite without the consent of my parents. Mother's idea was that it was beneath our station in life to learn to sew, so I was the only one in the family who could."

Married Very Young.

So small Mollye learned to ues a needle and thread, to cut and fit a sleeve, to dress her own playthings. Then she married, quite young, and that is where the Kewpie doll comes in.

"The year I was married I was walking along the boardwalk at Atlantic City. I carried a Kewpie doll whose clothes were copies of my own, namely, the hand crocheted garments so popular at the time. A gentleman approached me and wanted to know where I had bought the doll. I told him I had made the dresses, and he asked me if I could make some for him. I said 'No I am married.' At that time I thought it was not right for a married woman to earn a dollar.

"However, when I returned to the city, I had too much time on my hands and too little money. So I originated what was known as the "Powder Puff Doll,"—dressed in crocheted dress, pants, muff and cap.

"I didn't know much about crocheting, but finally learned the various stitches, dressed and sold my dolls, and had so many orders that I had to get help. Within five weeks I had hired ten girls to help me. Soon the dolls sold for as high as $25 in many Atlantic City stores."

First Order for $108.

The next year German dolls began to be replaced by those of American manufacture. The dolls were poorly dressed, and Mrs. Goldman discovered that buyers were removing the clothes and dressing them in clothes of her design. Still little known, she received her first order from Gimbel Brothers in Philadelphia.

Soon other stores sent orders, and Mrs. Goldman's business was well begun. A leading doll manufacturer saw the increased sales and higher values of Molly-'es dressed dolls, and the president gave Mrs. Goldman her first trip to New York, and offered her a position as designer of all the clothes in his factory.

Because she wanted to expand her own ideas, and because her independent business was progressing, Mrs. Goldman didn't take the offer. Her hopes were realized, and four years later she won a national prize for clothes and the title, "America's Leading Doll Clothes Stylist." About that time the dress designer for the New York house died, so she designed and made clothes for them in her own factory.

One idea is foremost in Mrs. Goldman's mind—"I want to impress upon every mother, the importance of a well-dressed doll for her child. It not only helps the child develop good taste, but sometimes actually changes the child's disposition and habits. If a mother buys a huge doll dressed in gaudy colors, the child will grow to have tastes of the same sort."

She cites an instance of a reticent, backward child, whose nature was changed by the advent of Mrs. Goldman and her dresses. "When I first met the child in Florida, says Mrs. Goldman," she wouldn't talk or come near me. This was unusual because I make friends with children very readily. So I sent for a doll, tap suit, bathing suit, beach pajama, hat and coat. Madeline's mother had a wardrobe made to match that of the doll. The youngster was delighted and we were fast friends after that.

"Later I received a letter from her mother saying that this child, who had heretofore refused to go to the beach, play in the sun, eat proper food, or make friends, had changed entirely."

If Washington children like to dress their own dolls, here's a hint for them: Follow Goldman's advice, make fashionable, simple frocks, like your own best dresses. It might be a good idea to copy one of your own frocks, for you surely want your doll to be as well dressed as you are.

Tomorrow, read the story of Mme. Alexander, who manufactures fiction and character dolls.

The doll's fashion designer, Mrs. Mollye Goldman, poses with the wedding of the painted dolls. The clothes for the bridal party are fine examples of Mrs. Goldman's skill, and were displayed at the Chicago Fair.

Chinese Still Measure Wisdom by Gray Hairs

GRAY HAIR is still a gauge of wisdom in China and increasing years bring merrymaking rather than remorse, according to Mrs. Nelson Johnson, wife of the United States Minister to China, who is visiting in Washington.

"The tradition of honoring one's elders is still observed to a noticeable degree in China," she said, "and that is probably why Chinese women don't dread the onslaught of the years.

"As a result, Oriental women are very frank about their age and are frankly interested in finding out the age of any other woman they may meet."

"Another thing I noticed when I first went over was that there are not a number of different types of women, as there are in America. They are all apparently cut from the same pattern. All have olive complexions, narrow eyes, and black hair framing their oval faces. And most of them are short in stature and slender in figure."

Slim Figure Popular.

Curves have gained no popularity in China, Mrs. Johnson reports. The slim, hipless, bustless figure that has been the vogue in China for many decades is still in fashion.

"Clothes of Chinese women are particularly well suited to such figures," she said. "Typical feminine attire—the high-necked, close-fitting frock—is definitely Oriental. Chinese women obviously have no desire to imitate the dress of western women, except in the matter of shoes. One often sees high-heeled American-made shoes in China.

"The foreign influence is noticed, also, in coiffures, for bobbed hair, permanently-waved, is the rule rather than the exception among the younger Chinese women. Older women, however, still generally wear their hair combed back smoothly and coiled in a knot at the back."

The contrast between the old and the young, the ancient and the new, can be noted in almost every phase of life in modern China, Mrs. Johnson said.

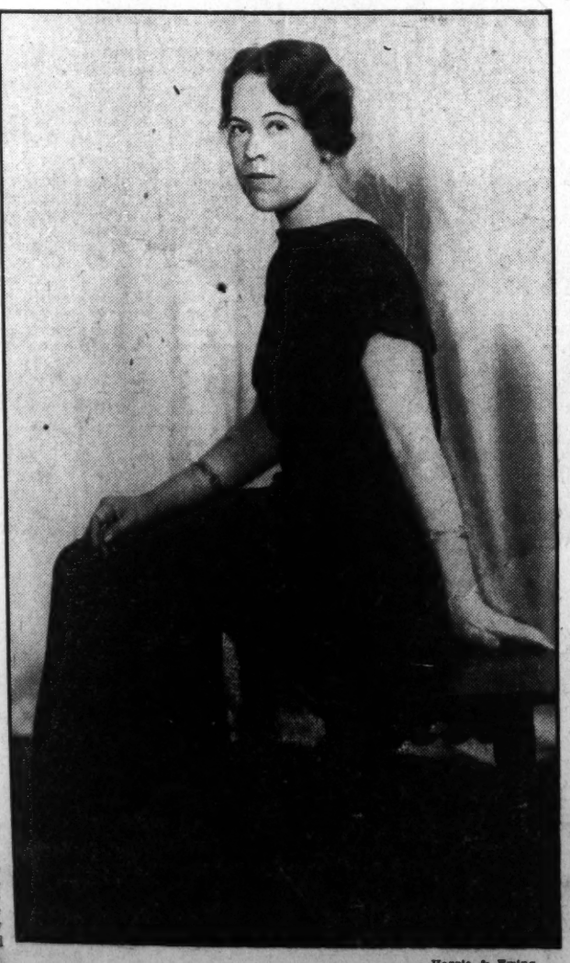
Youths Abandon Tradition.

"Younger people, for instance, are breaking away from old traditions that circumscribed the Chinese youth of past decades," she explained. "They are beginning to establish homes of their own after marriage, whereas it has been an almost universally observed custom for a son to continue living in his father's home after marriage. As a result, many different families all reside under the same roof, the oldest man in the entire group being the head of the clan. At one time in the history of China, such an arrangement was almost an economic necessity. Large families could hardly have survived if every son established a home of his own when he married.

"Today, however, married sons often live away from their parents. Yet the family tie is still a strong one, and the oldest persons in the entire family connection are still accorded the greatest respect."

Mrs. Johnson pointed out that the average woman of China had a large family and, consequently, found little time for social activities outside of her home.

"I have been told that ten years ago, a Chinese woman rarely accompanied her husband when he dined away from his own house. Now, however, one often sees a Chinese woman with her husband dining out, or at the theater. But even yet, the average Chinese woman does not have as active a social life as the average American woman. Her family is so large, she has little time left to devote to anything outside the home."



Harris & Ewing.

The palms still go to older persons in China. That is probably why women of the lotus land are so proud of their increasing years, according to Mrs. Nelson T. Johnson, wife of the United States Minister to China.

Man Reader Recommends Two Projects to "Faith's" Attention.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Although a bit late to answer the letter of "Faith" in your column last Thursday, I am going to offer two suggestions which may be of benefit to her.

* * * *

1. The Washington Post sponsors a long walk each Sunday in the country under the leadership of Mr. Robert Shosteck and Dr. Ulke. The group taking these walks bears the name of "Wanderbirds." No fee is charged except for bus or car fare, and among the 40 or 60 persons who make up the usual party she will be pretty sure to find some one whom she will be glad to know. The notice of each week's excursion will be found in the Friday issue of The Post, often with a little map of the region to be explored.

* * * *

2. The study of Esperanto is one that often leads to warm friendship, because Experanto is itself based on a desire for good understanding and friendship between peoples or nations. There are now at least three beginners' and as many advanced classes in this interesting international language here in Washington.

* * * *

The classes are free and this fact of itself shows the spirit pervading Esperanto circles. When teachers are willing to teach free and pay their own expenses, it is sufficient evidence of their interest in their subject. Textbooks cost about 25 cents and a few lessons with faithful study enable one to communicate with thousands of like minded persons in more than 50 different lands. Further information may be had from Esperanto headquarters at 1340 New York avenue northwest, or from this writer.

H. B. HASTINGS.

Hiking and Study.

DEAR MR. HASTINGS: For obvious reasons, I have refrained from calling attention in this column to the benefits which accrue to lonely persons through membership in The Post's project, "The Wanderbirds." However, we have indisputable evidence, in the form of written testimonials on file in this office, that many erstwhile lonesome men and women who investigated the possibilities of this hiking club have found it yielded pleasant companionship and the enjoyment of a stimulating hobby.

* * * *

After all, there is no more potent medicine for banishing the blues than to get out of doors, especially into the country. It imparts a sense of uplift, a mental perspective, that the person denied sufficient social contacts can seldom find in the restricting environment of a busy city. It is this quality of spiritual release, as much as propinquity with persons of similar tastes and needs, which makes for friendship among members of "The Wanderbirds." The shy person, the introvert, is suddenly freed of his encumbering restraint, and finds himself involuntarily sharing his thoughts and reactions with his neighbor.

* * * *

While I know nothing of the study of Esperanto, other than that it is a subject which has claimed the attention of a great many people, in this and other cities, I am happy to pass your indorsement of it's possibilities along to any who may be seriously intent on finding interests outside themselves.

I am sure "Faith" will appreciate your interest, and I hope she may find its suggestions applicable to her case. (Mr. Hastings' address, by the way, is 1525 O street northwest.)

Two Winds.

OF ALL THE winds that blow
I know but two:
The wind that brings the storm in
And the wind that brings me you.

Oh, the storm wind's a woman wild with grief,
Her long hair torn by the rocky reef—
She tries to sing with her broken lute
A song she knew, but her lips are mute.
Her eyes alone in eloquence
Let fall her purple penitence . . .
Bareheaded there beneath the sky
I wave, and watch her hurry by.

And sometimes on a wakeful night
When stars outshine the pale moonlight,
When sleep and you are far away
And darkness glimmers into day,
Among my flowers you loved so well
A fairy zephyr weaves a spell . . .
And with their fragrance wafts to me
The presence of your love, machree.

Of all the winds that blow, I know but two—
The wind that brings the storm in
And the wind that brings me you.

BEYOND THE farthest mountain peak
Beneath a blue-white star
Lie fragrant fields of peacefulness
Where our lost childhoods are,
With all bright gifts to little folk,
Wise men bring from afar.

Those lovely fields will never spread
Again before our eyes,
Nor all forgotten glory come
To bless a child's surprise:
For men are children grown too tall
To see where beauty lies.

Each faulty turning that his feet had found,
And every acre of forbidden ground
Where he had trespassed. In his memory grew
Gigantic pictures of the midget crew
Of follies that had mutinied and bound
Him stoutly with old habits. There unwound
The endless coil of things he meant to do
There came the knowledge that, were succor near,
The old, mistaken turnings still would be Like magnets to his feet; forbidden ways
Would beckon still; and folly's mutiny
Still conquer him . . . The muscles of his fear
Relaxed, and through the turmoil of the sea
He glimpsed the moonlight in a golden blaze.

What Today Means

"Sagittarius."

IF DECEMBER 3 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 3:30 p. m., and from 8:30 to 10:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m. and from 10:30 until midnight.

Social activities are likely to absorb some of your time, so be careful not to offend your host or hostess by neglecting to show them the proper amount of attention. Married and engaged couples, as well as those engaged in courtships, should exercise a great deal of tact in their dealings with each other's relatives, for any charge of discourtesy is likely to lead to complications.

If a woman and December 3 is your birthday, you may be inclined to take life too seriously. It might be best if you make it a habit to divert your mind by taking an interest in some light and amusing form of entertainment two or three times a week.

Remember "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is also nowadays applicable to girls as well. Scientific research or laboratory work, writing, certain branches of teaching or lecturing offer careers for one of your disposition.

If a man and December 3 is your natal day, it might be well for you to bear in mind that philosophy is a pleasant process of reasoning from an individual standpoint, but liable to create considerable irritation, if indulged in at some one else's expense.

Champ Clark's Daughter Holds 2-Day Celebration

Mrs. Genevieve Thomson's Birthday Follows Thanksgiving.

By Pattie Ellicott.

MRS. GENEVIEVE CLARK THOMSON, who recently returned to New Orleans after passing the early fall here in research work for a forthcoming biography, last week held a two-day birthday celebration at her home.

Mrs. Thomson, only daughter of the late Speaker and Mrs. Champ Clark, and wife of James M. Thomson, owner and publisher of the New Orleans Item-Tribune, was born on Thanksgiving Day, November 30, 1894. The anniversary of her birth falls on Thanksgiving only once in six or seven years. Because of this she always holds a dual anniversary, one on Thanksgiving Day and one on November 30.

The former "Daughter of the House," who took to newspaper work during her debutante days in Washington, has continued her interest in writing and is now working on a biography of Judah Benjamin, a Confederate leader. From an early age Mrs. Thomson had been interested in the story of the notable Hebrew who espoused the Southern cause. After she married and went to New Orleans to live, her interest in him deepened. It was from Louisiana that he went to the Senate of the United States. Later he became Attorney General and Secretary of War in the cabinet of Jefferson Davis.

Writing and politics have shared Mrs. Thomson's interest since she was a young girl. While a debutante here, she wrote for leading American newspapers. One of her first feats in this field was to report a Congressional trip to Panama and her stories of the work on the Canal were widely published.

After her marriage, Mrs. Thomson took an active interest in her husband's newspaper, not only on the editorial side but also in the business department. Recently she originated a daily feature on the Item-Tribune, a resume of the interesting things and legislation in Congress.

She was especially well qualified for this work because of her knowledge of national politics, which had been table talk in her family since she was a child. Mrs. Thomson follows with keen interest the career of her brother, Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri.

Harris & Ewing.

Mrs. Genevieve Clark Thomson has been doing research in Washington for a biography of Judah Benjamin.

A few years ago Mrs. Thomson ran for Congress. As the first woman to attempt to enter national political life from Louisiana and facing much prejudice against women in politics, she made a remarkable race, being defeated by less than 1,500 votes.

On her recent visit to Washington Mrs. Thomson expressed enthusiasm over the opportunities journalism offers women.

"I am delighted to see so many newspaper women in the field in Washington," she said. "On my husband's paper in New Orleans the women have important roles and we are proud that the first woman ever working as a reporter on the Associated Press in this country was a graduate of the New Orleans Item-Tribune staff."

Women Voters In Washington For Meetings

League Rally at Powhatan Will Discuss Changes in Tax Program.

MANY out-of-town members of the National League of Women Voters will come to Washington to attend the meeting of the league's board of directors, opening today and continuing through Friday at the Powhatan Hotel.

The two-year campaign of the league in behalf of more trained personnel in public service and reorganization of antiquated tax systems will be the principal topic of discussion.

A special campaign committee composed of Mrs. George Gellhorn, Mrs. Jasper King, Mrs. Laura Hughes Lunde, Mrs. Malcolm McBride and Miss Florence L. Harrison will present a tentative program at the meeting.

Among those attending will be Miss Marguerite Wells, Mrs. Harris T. Baldwin, Mrs. Royal G. Whiting, Miss Anna Lord Strauss, Mrs. Elsie A. Zinsmeister, Mrs. Paul C. Savage, Mrs. David Chandler, Mrs. Augustus M. Roan, Mrs. Arthur M. McGeoch.

Peace Lecture Topic.

MISS MARY MOSS WELLBORN will describe her experiences with the flying squadron which carried on a pre-election campaign to impress on Congressional candidates the peace sentiment of the country at a meeting of the District branch of the Women's International League at 5 o'clock today at the home of Mrs. Frank J. Fost, 2601 Thirtieth street northwest.

Mrs. Frost is chairman of the District branch, and Miss Elizabeth Wheeler, daughter of Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, is vice chairman.

Delphians to Meet.

THE GAMMA CHAPTER of the Delphian Society will meet at 8:15 o'clock tonight at the Shoreham Hotel. The subject will be "The Renaissance in Italy." Miss Evelyn Kay will lead the meeting.

The following topics will be discussed: "General Character of the Italian Renaissance," by Mrs. Margaret Davis; "Venice," by Mrs. O. N. Fansler; "Florence," by Mrs. Mary G. Mathiot; "Milan," by Miss Sophia Lunsford.

Nice Facing Baffling Job In Maryland

Will Assume Duties at Critical Moment in State's History.

Democrats Holding Key Posts May Present Added Problem.

(Post Staff Writer).

Harry W. Nice, who returns to Baltimore today to prepare for his inauguration next month as Governor of Maryland, faces as difficult a task as any man ever elected chief executive of an American State.

With a relief problem becoming more pressing every day, with demands from every direction for increased State expenditures and a general opposition to any increase in the State tax rate, even so experienced and veteran an administrator as Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, had he been reelected, would have found the job baffling.

Mr. Nice, however, steps into the State House at a critical moment with only a superficial knowledge of the State's business. He will be forced to depend on a group of assistants as inexperienced in the beginning as he is—men in all probability selected not for their business or administrative ability but because of their value as practical politicians.

Moreover the new Governor will find in key positions in his administration—the attorney general, State controller and State treasurer—men of another political faith, unenthusiastic for his success, if not anxious for his undoing. He further will find the legislative branch of the government controlled by Democrats who will be cold toward his aspirations.

Array of Obstacles.

Such an array of obstacles would appear sufficient to chill the ardor of the most optimistic public official. It is asserted that Mr. Nice when he appraises what is before him is "scared to death." Publicly he has asserted he approaches his new job with humility and with the hope that all good citizens will give him the support he needs.

Yet it must be said that since his election last month, and although he does not sit in the Governor's chair for another month, Mr. Nice has approached his new task in an undaunted, determined manner. He has named five committees to commence the formulation at once of various aspects of the program he proposes to carry out.

In the selection of these committees he has exhibited none of the narrow partisanship which was attributed to him during the heat of the campaign. The personnel of his committee to devise a system of State unemployment insurance, for instance, was exceptionally well-balanced between Democrats and Republicans, conservatives and liberals, labor and employers. Such a body may be expected to prepare a penetrating, comprehensive report on the subject.

Probe of Agencies.

The Governor-elect further has announced that he proposes to make a sweeping investigation of the activities of every agency of the State Government and to redeem every other promise made during the campaign, including the reduction of automobile license fees to $2 annually. Mr. Nice easily could have avoided that proposal by pointing to the muddled finances of the State Roads Commission, just brought to light, as an excuse.

But over the week-end he asserted that despite the reckless spending of the Roads Commission under his predecessor, he intended to adhere to his $2 automobile tag pledge. Incidentally, the condition of the Roads Commission's finances will make his task no easier, since it appears this agency in the past election year spent or obligated one-fourth of next year's revenues.

While Mr. Nice has devoted himself to a study of the problems facing him, and Gov. Ritchie has been investigating the activities of his roads commission, the politicians in both Democratc and Republican parties have been busy devising schemes to hold on to or to extend their opprtunities for jobs.

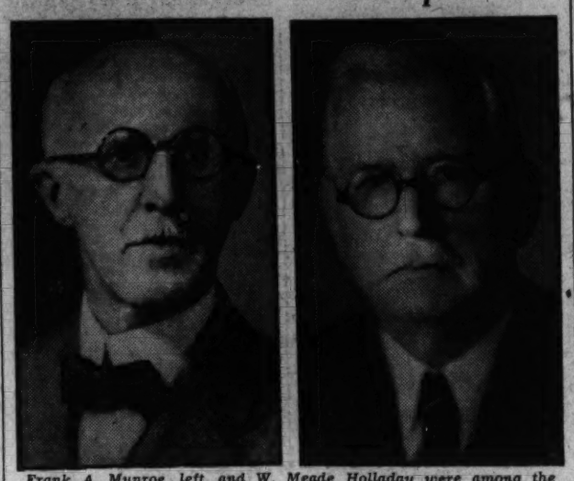
Democratic Scheme.

Several weeks ago some Democrats who in all probability will lose their jobs next May—when Mr. Nice's appointments would become effective — concocted a scheme whereby the Democratic Legislature during its first week, before Mr. Nice is inaugurated, would adopt a bill transferring from the Governor to the board of public works authority to name the various department heads and members of the commission. The board of public works will have a Democratic majority during the next four years and the purpose of this scheme was to keep within Democratic hands the State patronage bag.

Gov. Ritchie, however, quickly announced he would not sign such a bill, if passed by the Legislature. It is doubtful whether such a bill could be put through the Legislature since the Republican members certainly would resort to filibuster tactics with probable success.

The Republicans, on the other hand, likewise have been busy concocting schemes to lessen Democratic influence in the Legislature. One plan, considered in a high Republican quarter, provides for taking advantage of the conflicting aspirations of Senate Democrats for the presidency of that body.

Assume Office at Annapolis



Frank A. Munroe, left, and W. Meade Holladay were among the officials inducted into office at Annapolis, Md., Saturday. Mr. Munroe is clerk of the circuit court of Anne Arundel County, being the first Republican to hold that office in 50 years. Mr. Holladay, register of wills, received the largest majority ever given a candidate for a local office there.

B. C. Roberts Dies at Ranson; Funeral Today

Former Councilman and Mayor Was Active in Fraternal Work.

Ranson, W. Va., Dec. 2 (AP).—Funeral rites will be conducted here tomorrow for Benjamin C. Roberts, 79, former mayor and councilman, who died yesterday.

Mr. Roberts came to Ranson 15 years ago from the Summit Point neighborhood. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and a member of several fraternal organizations, including the Masons and the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Roberts is survived by his widow and two daughters, Mrs. Will Allen, of Winchester, Va., and Mrs. Frank Pine, of Charles Town, and two sons, John Roberts, of Paterson, N. J., and William Roberts, of Charles Town. Mr. Roberts leaves one brother, the Rev. W. F. Roberts, of Baltimore, Md.

William T. Nicholson.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Ida Lusby Nicholson; a son, Earle I. Nicholson, and two daughters, Mrs. Carey Reinhart and Mrs. Albert Jervis.

Funeral services will be conducted Tuesday.

Concerns Protest 'Bootleg' Coal Sale

HagerstownCouncil Studies Bill to Ban It.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—An ordinance to ban "bootleg" coal dealers who do not have an established place of business, presented by local coal dealers is being studied by the mayor and city council.

A similar ordinance presented by Baltimore coal dealers, was declared unconstitutional, and city officials here expressed the opinion that the proposed ordinance's provisions were being studied with this thought in mind.

Local coal dealers as well as railroads here have been hard hit by coal being trucked into the city from nearby mines and sold for as much as $2 under the price quoted by established dealers.

Maryland News Told in Brief

(Associated Press.)

Cumberland—Six appointments will be made by the Allegany County board of commissioners which meets Tuesday. The jobs are: County physician, superintendent of the county insane asylum, attorney to the board, janitor, elevator operator and night janitor at the courthouse.

Frederick—The annual entertainment held by the Frederick Empty Stocking Club for needy children will be on December 21. More than 300 children are expected to attend. Each child will be given candy, nuts and a toy.

Chestertown—A total of $43,000 in Christmas savings funds has been distributed to Kent County citizens by Chestertown banks. The total is smaller than that of last year.

Cumberland—Some agency is needed to care for persons on relief rolls who are in need of medical attention, Dr. Joseph P. Franklin, county health officer, feels. The steadily mounting number of relief cases in need of medical care has placed a heavy burden on physicians and surgeons here, he said.

Mechanicsville—The recently-formed Mechanicsville volunteer fire department is preparing plans to assure an adequate supply of water for fire-fighting purposes. The village has no public water system and lack of water has hampered firemen in fighting several recent blazes.

At 9:45 a. m. Wednesday reports of committees will be heard and addresses by L. J. Turner, Rappahannock County agent; William B. Alwood, Greenwood, Va.; C. R. Willey, assistant State entomologist, Richmond, and T. B. Hutcheson, agronomist, V. P. I., will be heard.

J. S. Wills, county agent of Botetourt, will discuss the Roanoke district horticultural tour to open the Wednesday afternoon session, and he will be followed by R. H. Hurt, university pathologist, who will discuss peach spray with emphasis on brown rot control.

S. A. Winegard, V. P. I. pathologist, will discuss black plague of apples and T. B. Byrd, of Winchester, will discuss important factors in annual production of apples.

Daniel N. Casey, of Harrisburg, Pa., will make a humorous address as a feature of the banquet which will be served Wednesday night. The banquet will be followed by a dance.

Speakers Are Listed.

On Thursday, D. A. Tucker, V. P. I., will give some general observations; A. W. Drinkard, jr., also of V. P. I., will discuss research work, and Dean H. L. Price will discuss the topic, "Are Virginia growers preparing to meet outside competition?" A. H. Teske, V. P. I., will discuss cover crops and C. E. Dutton, Milford Center, Ohio, will have as his topic, "Hose Irrigation."

Speakers for the Thursday afternoon session are A. B. Groves, V. P. I., on control of apple scab and russet; F. J. Schneiderhan, pathologist, Kerneysville, W. Va., on black root threat to apple orchards; R. G. Phillips, secretary International Apple Association, Rochester, N. Y., on foreign and domestic apple market outlook and W. S. Hough, Winchester, on codling moth sprays and calyx injury.

Country Club Operator Fined on Liquor Count

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.). R. C. Hamilton, operator of the Virginia Country Club, a suburban roadhouse, was found guilty last week in trial justice's court on charges of selling alcoholic beverages without an ABC license and fined $175 and costs and given a nine months' suspended sentence.

He also was required to furnish a $500 nonviolation bond for 12 months. On a charge of possession of a slot machine he was fined $50 and costs.

Hamilton pleaded not guilty to charges of illegal possession of whisky and selling without an ABC license, and entered a plea of guilty on charges of possession of a slot machine.

Dr. Williams Assigned To X-ray Equipment

Salisbury, Md., Dec. 2 (AP).—Dr. Jack K. Williams of the Peninsula General Hospital staff here has been placed in charge of the new X-ray equipment recently installed. Dr. Williams is an expert in use of the X-ray.

Richmond, Dec. 2.—With the annual all-important topics of politics and football relegated to the background, at least for the time being, Virginians appear to be devoting their chief thoughts to the matter of providing adequate relief for the needy persons of the State this winter.

And the fact that such relief will be needed, probably in greater measure than ever before is heard echoed on every hand by State, county and municipal authorities, who are seeking some way out of an apparent wilderness which, according to some of them threatens to become apparent.

Chief concern to the legislators of the State is a proposal that Gov. George C. Peery call a special session of the Virginia Legislature to devise ways and means of raising large enough sums of money to be used for relief purposes. At the moment, it appears that such a session will not be called—at least until midwinter, if then. The failure to call a special session of the Legislature at this time is not blamed on any lack of appreciation of the unemployment situation on the part of Gov. Peery, but appears to lie largely in the fact that certain Federal relief appropriations to the State continue until February 1 and in view of these facts it is believed among many legislators that there is ample time for even considering a special session.

Job Insurance.

While Virginians of a few years ago thought of relief as an occasional soup kitchen or the providing of lodging by jails and police stations to transients, as provided by State statute, they now appear to be considering the relief question in the light of a permanently administered system.

And the permanency of the relief situation in the minds of the people of this State appears to be based largely on the thesis that even the days of economic recovery will not witness a complete absorption of the unemployed. Looking at the matter of permanent relief in such a light, well-informed circles of the State report that some officials—State and local—are giving serious consideration to plans which could be so organized as to permanently set up relief distribution in the State which would in effect be a system of unemployment insurance.

While it must be accepted that the idea of permanent relief organizations in this State has hardly reached the embryo stage, yet one frequently hears county and municipal officials discuss the matter of giving those on relief some particular task to perform which would not place them in competition with others normally employed. Such a system of permanent relief in the Old Dominion, if ever arrived at, it is believed in well-informed quarters, will have to take on the aspect of furnishing noncompetitive work to a portion of the population all the time.

State's Percentage.

Whether the permanent relief system will ever be established in Virginia is a matter of conjecture now with the main thoughts being turned toward just what share of the relief burder the State itself is going to bear this coming winter. Thus far, the localities claim, the State has handled but a small part of the relief burden. In fact the statistics of the Virginia Emergency Relief Administration for October showed that of the State's relief bill for a month totaling $1,001,526.60, the State paid but $4,585.48, while the Federal Government forked up 900,383.74 and the localities, $106,557.

Along with the relief situation, other economic matters of prime importance to the State recently have occupied the attention of the Old Dominion's citizenry in general.

Virginia education authorities meeting in Richmond this week viewed the Civilian Conservation Corps as a possible forerunner of "a most important feature of our educational program," but scorned made work for college student relief as "little removed from an outright dole."

These sentiments were expressed by Dr. Sidney B. Hall, Virginia superintendent of public instruction, who said, "Now that the butcher, baker and candlestick-maker have given place to the abattoir, delicatessen and electric power company, the need for youth in the home and shop has almost passed and some substitute must be found," he said.

"More education is society's decision," he said.

Emergency Program.

Dr. Hall added that relief aid to college students "does not offer any desirable features that should be continued beyond a brief emergency."

Another phase of the Recovery Administration now being watched closely in Virginia is that of the NIRA codes and the control provisions as they are applied in the State.

Although entirely disconnected, the decision of the State Supreme Court of Appeals holding the Virginia milk control act to be unconstitutional has entered in discussions of the case of the Standard Drug Co., which is fighting against an injunction sought by the State code authority to restrain the company from violating the drug code under the State recovery law.

A lower court in Richmond overruled a demurrer and upheld the constitutionality of the drug code on the same day that the higher court declared invalid the milk-control act. Since that time the lower court has taken under advisement the actual granting of the injunction and indicated action will await the decision of the higher court on a proposed rehearing of the milk case.

Meanwhile, it has been developed that the State recovery act, paralleling the national recovery act, expires next June 16.

Guns, Used as Bond, Lost to Washington Men; Sold for Fines

Romney, W. Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.). John Yates, of Washington, was arrested here October 19 by Game Warden W. M. Ansell for killing illegal game. Yates, tried before Justice T. E. Pownall, was unable to pay his fine, so he and his three companions left four guns as a deposit.

The fine had not been paid and no word had been heard of Yates nor his companions, so the guns were sold last week in front of the courthouse. The sale totaled $27, which covered the fine and the cost.

Drug Industry Shuns Parley

Denies It Has 'Gone Over Head' of NRA in Code Trouble.

Baltimore, Dec. 2 (AP).—R. E. Lee Williamson, chairman of the National Wholesale Drug Code committee, today denied that the wholesale drug industry has "gone over the heads" of NRA officials and taken its code troubles to the Federal Trade Commission.

Williamson took issue with a conference between FTC commissioners and representatives of the National Wholesale Druggists Association which will be held in Chicago December 6 to "establish and define regulations of fair practice" for the industry.

"Published reports say this conference represents the wholesale drug industry," Williamson said, "and I wish to correct this impression."

"A conference will be held—but the industry as a whole will have no part in it. My committee, elected by a national mailed ballot, has not been officially informed of the meeting nor has it been officially invited to attend.

"The industry has not 'gone over the heads' of NRA officials—in any respect. The committee of which I am chairman drew up a code acceptable to the entire industry and it was filed with the NRA late in August."

Dr. Edwin W. Broome, superintendent of education of Montgomery County, will be the speaker at the December meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association of the Chevy Chase Elementary School at 8 p. m., tomorrow at the school.

The membership committee, under the leadership of Mrs. J. Alan Maphis, will report on a membership campaign. Mrs. Albert A. Fenderson will ipreside.

Missionary and Aid Societies May Merge

A joint meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society and the Ladies Aid Society, of the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church, will be held Wednesday at 10:30 a. m. to discuss combining the two societies. Mrs. John Milton Sylvester is president of the missionary society and Mrs. E. Clyde Shade is serving her fourteenth year as president of the aid society. Mrs. Edgar V. Crittenden is chairman of the committee named to study the question of a merger. Both societies are among the largest in the Washington Presbytery.

Good Will, Understandi Teusler Memorial Topic

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Misunderstandings between the United States and Japan can be solved by "good will and justice and understanding," various prominent speakers said today at memorial services for Dr. Rudolf Bolling Teusler, founder and director of St. Luke's international medical center in Tokyo.

Hiroshi Saito, Japanese ambassador to Washington, said Dr. Teusler's work would remain as "a strong link in our friendly relations."

Harrisonburg Liquor Inquiry Meets a Delay

Judge and Counsel to Be Engaged Elsewhere in Court This Week.

Harrisonburg, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—This week will see a lull in the Federal grand jury investigation into the Franklin County conspiracy to violate the national revenue laws, as Judge John Paul will be busy with the regular court session at Lynchburg, and Sterling Hutcheson, United States attorney for eastern Virginia, who is presenting the evidence, will be engaged in court at Alexandria.

The grand jurors already have spent 12 days in hearing more than 100 witnesses. Government agents say that at least 100 more will be heard before the investiagtion is ended, probably about the first of the year.

Called "Wettest" Spot.

This probe is one of the most mysterious and said to be one of the most far-reaching ever conducted in Virginia. Franklin County was described in the Wickersham report as the "wettest" spot in the United States. Residents say that Franklin County gets credit for moonshine produced in the mountains of adjacent Floyd and Patrick counties.

Federal agents will give no indication as to those involved in the alleged whisky ring. They say that at least 25 persons may be involved in the expose of the conspiracy, alleged to have controlled moonshining and liquor distributing operations centered about Rocky Mount, the county seat.

Most of the witnesses to date have been mountain residents, many of them moonshiners. The Government agents, during their 14 months' investigation, won their confidence by assuring them everyone was to be treated alike, whether "high or low."

Smooth Working Ring.

Ace operatives of the United States Treasury Department who investigated the Franklin County situation, assert the organization clicked like the rings they uncovered in the big cities during the days of prohibition. The agents claim that the still operators paid for their right to operate and the rum runners who hauled away the contraband also contributed their share.

There are hints that the county was divided into regions with a supervisor in each who collected for the "higher-ups." Still operators were required to purchase their supplies from certain sources. Most of the moonshine was transported to Roanoke. Other portions went to Lynchburg, Bluefield and adjacent regions of West Virginia.

Star witnesses at the inquiry so far have been Tom C. Cundiff, who is under a three-year centence for assaulting a fellow mountaineer and faces additional counts of escaping from the Rocky Mount Jail, assaulting an officer, and taking an automobile, and Mrs. Willie Sharpe, the woman pilot of many liquor cars over the mountain roads of Franklin County. Mrs. Sharpe has just completed a three-year term at Alderson Reformatory for complicity in violating the prohibition laws.

Cundiff asserted in open court at Rocky Mount that he had paid for protection. He and Commonwealth's Attorney Carter Lee engaged in an argument and court attaches intervened. Cundiff was given-ten-day sentence for contempt of court.

Four Banks Distribute $150,000 Yule Savings

Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.) Distribution of more than $150,000 in Christmas club checks was effected yesterday by the four local banks.

More than 1,000 persons were benefited by the Christmas club funds. Circulation of the money is expected to begin.

Police Drag Bay Waters For Hunters

Believed They Perished as Their Rowboat Overturned.

Havre de Grace, Md., Dec. 2 (AP). Directed by police, several boatloads of men today were dragging the waters of the Chesapeake Bay near here for traces of two duck hunters who are believed to have drowned Saturday. The missing men are A. Ross Garey, 17, son of Maj. and Mrs. Enoch Barton Garey, of Oakington, and Harry Porter, an instructor of the Baltimore Polytechnic Institute.

Relatives of the two have given up hope of finding them alive and police said there is little doubt they were drowned when their boat overturned.

Investigation disclosed the fact the pair did not reach the duck blind to which they had said they were going. No decoys had been placed near it and there were no empty shells in it.

The rowboat in which they left land before daylight yesterday was found floating upside down near the head of the Chesapeake Bay. There were no guns or other equipment in the boat.

Young Garey was graduated last year from his father's school for boys, located at Oakington. Maj. Garey was president of St. John's College from 1923 to 1929.

Porter is a brother-in-law of Drs. Charles and Cecil Bagley, of Baltimore. He has been associated with the English department of the Polytechnic Institute since 1912.

Three Found Dead.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Dec. 2 (AP).—Several hours after returning from a party, two men and an unemployed waitress were found dead today in a bedroom, victims of gas fumes from two unlighted burners in a stove.

The dead: William P. Fleak, 41, a truck driver; George D. Stanton, 35, salesman, and Mrs. Mabel Pickrell, unemployed waitress.

The three were found in the Stanton home by Mrs. Sarah Stanton, mother of one of the victims.

Mrs. Pickrell is survived by two sons of a former marriage, Kenneth Hillberry, of Parkersburg, and Albert Ray Hilfberry, serving in the United States Navy, and a daughter, Mrs. Carlton Wilson, of Cincinnati.

Coroner Ben O. Robinson said no inquest will be held, returning a verdict of accidental death.

Farmer Found Dead.

Pocomoke City, Md., Dec. 2 (Spl.), George S. Lang, 64, farmer, from Greenbackville, near here, was found dead yesterday under an overturned horse cart by Ray Coulbourne, a neighbor.

It is believed the cart turned over on rounding the turn and Lang strangled. No bones were broken and only one cut and one bruise were found by Dr. J. D. Dickerson, attending physician.

Chestertown, Md., Dec. 2 (AP).—Relatives here were notified today of the death of George Vickers, 51, well known Kent County man, in Los Angeles.

Vickers comes of a prominent Maryland family. His grandfather, George Vickers, was United States Senator from Maryland and for years was a Democratic leader of Kent County. A brother, Harrison W. Vickers, jr., is a Democratic leader and was State conservation commissioner.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—Robert McLucas, 18, Indian Springs, Washington County, trapper, was found today fatally shot beside a trap in the mountains some distance from the home of his grandfather, Simon McLucas, with whom he resided. He had been missing since early yesterday, when he left to go over his traps.

Bears Subdue Detroit by 10 to 7

Presnell's 33-Yard Run Late in Last Quarter Nets Lions' Score.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2 (AP).—Chicago's Bears, driving toward a third consecutive National Professional Football League championship, brought their regular schedule to a glittering climax today as they conquered the powerful Detroit Lions for the second time in four days before a crowd of 35,000 fans at Wrigley Field.

The Bears' margin, as they fashioned their thirteenth straight triumph of the campaign, was 10 to 7, and the Lions, who gave the champions their most violent battle this season last Thursday, failed to score until the waning minutes of the final period. Ace Gutowsky, who tore the Bear line aart last week, was kept well under control, and the Lion passing attack failed to operate successfully against the alert Bear defense.

Wet Field Hurts Lions.

soggy field slowed down both attacks, with the Lions, who depend on speed, suffering the most. Only once were they able to shake loose a man on one of those long, touchdown runs, while the Bears, heavy and powerful, seized two scoring opportunities, then carefully defended a lead set up in the first two periods.

The battle opened with both teams waiting for a break. When the break finally appeared, late in the opening period, it went to the Bears. George Musso, huge tackle, smashed through to block one of Dutch Clark's kicks and recovered the ball on the Lions' 27-yard line.

Scores in Seven Plays.

From here, Bronko Nagurski, the battering ram from Minnesota, showed the spectators and Lions a juicy sample of expert line crashing. He needed just seven plays in which to score. His first asault was good for 15 yards and three more titanic thrusts gave him a first down on the Detroit 2-yard mark. The desperate Lions stopped him once, but on the next try he went over. Jack Manders came in to kick the extra point.

In a hurry to get that touchdown back, the Lions took to hte air at the start of the second period. The net result was three more points for the bears. Carl Brumbaugh intercepted a toss from Glenn Presnell on the Lion 34, and on the next play, Keith Molesworth snapped a pass to Luke Johnsos for a first down on the 14. Once more the Lions dug in, hurling the Bears back for a loss of 3 yards in three plays. Then Manders went back to the 30-yard line and drove one of his placekicks over for the last Bear points.

Two More Gestures.

The Bears made two gestures in the third period, once when Bill Hewitt recovered a fumble by Gutowsky on the Lion 27, and again when they drove deep into Detroit territory on running plays.

The first opportunity blew up when Manders, of all kickers, missed a placekick from the 27. Presnell intercepted a heave from Red Grange on the Detroit 13-yard line, to stop the other one.

Detroit averted a shutout when the Bears, taking it a litlte too easy, lost the ball on downs on their 40-yard line. Presnell wasted little time in cashing in. He started with a pass to Father Lumkin for 7 yards, and from the same formation, bounced through hte left side of the Bear line on the next play. He pulled into the clear and romped the remaining 33 yards for a touchdown. He accounted for the extra point via Placekick.

Three-Eye League Back in Baseball

Six Clubs Are Entered; More Considered.

Bloomington, Ill., Dec. 2 (AP).—The three-Eye eLague, one of the oldest of baseball's minor loops until its suspension in the middle of the 1932 season, was back on the active list today as a six-club league.

L. J. Wylie, Decatur, temporary chairman of the league, has instructions to investigate other franchise seekers until December 16, when forfeits will be posted at another session here.

If the magnates decide to go as a six-club loop, the season will open May 5 and close September 8, with a 130-game playing schedule.

Record

Kentucky Wildcats Have Won 69 Games on Court.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Dec. 2 (AP). — The University of Kentucky has made a great record in basketball since the fall of 1929.

Probably no other major team has performed with the brilliance of the charges of Adolph Rupp, who took over the coaching duties in that year. Since then the Wildcats have won 69 games and lost only nine.

During the regular playing season of 1933-34, Kentucky was undefeated, but Florida upset the Blue Grass quintet in the aanual tournament at Atlanta. Aside from that loss, the Wildcats have conquered all Southeastern opponents during the last two years.

NewYork Giant Team Licked By Eagles

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 2 (AP).—ThePhiladelphia Eagles today turned back the New York Giants, champions of the East, 6 to 0, in their finale of the National Pro Football League season.

Big Jim Leonard, formerly of Notre Dame, led the Eagles' attack and scored the only touchdown of the afternoon. He crossed the final chalk mark on a plunge from the 3-yard stripe that smashed the very center of the Giants' line.

The touchdown came at the close of a 77-yard march by the Eagles—a march made possible by straight football mixed up with one well-executed forward pass, Matesic to Kirkman, that netted 18 yards. Leonard did most of the work, on one occasion carrying the ball four straight times to cover the needed distance for a first down.

The long drive came in the closing minutes of the second period after New York's first bid for a touchdown had been halted by an alert, hard-fighting Eagle team.

Safely out in front with the start of the second half, the Eagles showed great defense work as New York's grid stars came tearing down the field three times in the final periods.

At the head of these Giant advances was Willis Smith, former University of Idaho star, but his efforts were futile against the smoothly working Eagles machine. In the fourth period, the Giants resorted to the air in the hope of deadlocking the score.

One long pass, Strong to Burnett, seemed certain to be completed, but Swede Hanson leaped into the air and brought down the ball at the last second. Each team chalked up 13 first downs.

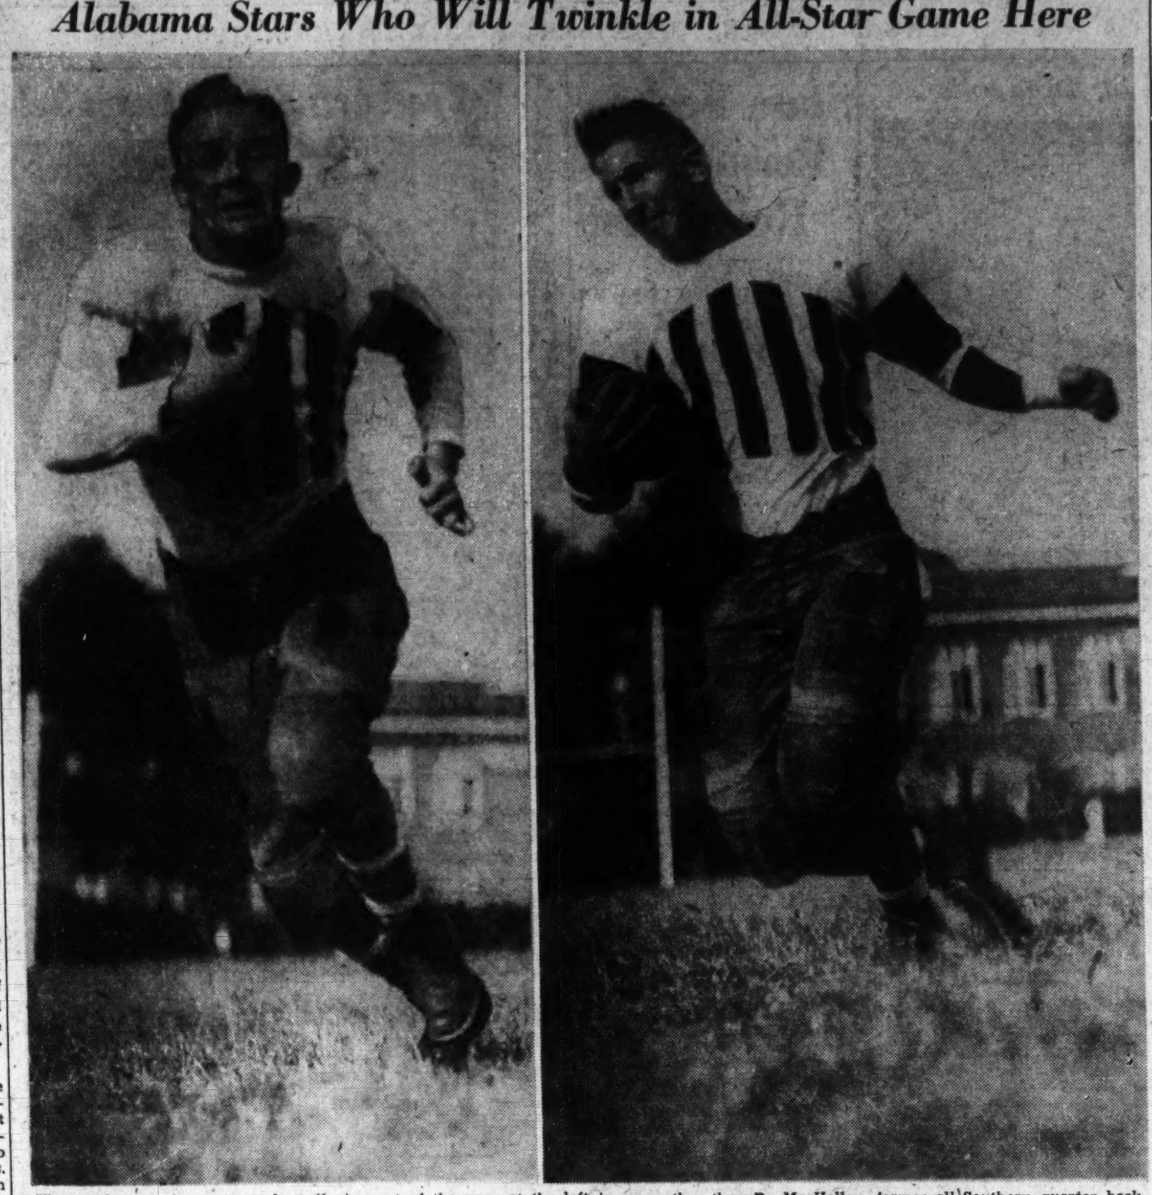
Alabama Stars Who Will Twinkle in All-Star Game Here



The gentleman who seems to be galloping out of the page at the left is none other than Bo MacHolley, former all-Southern quarter back. The gentleman to his right is Hurry Cain, erstwhile all-American full back. Both stars of Alabama teams that have played in the Rose Bowl, they will appear in the line-up for the Alabama All-Stars in their game against a specially selected team from the District at Griffith Stadium December 8.

Dodgers Lose To Redskins Of Boston

BOSTON, Dec. 2 (AP).—The BosRedskins closed their National football season with a 13-3 victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers in impressive fashion today before a crowd of 13,000 at Fenway Park.

Three passes, one an interception, supplied most of the distance for the Redskins' two scoring thrusts. Just before the opening period, Doug Wycoff completed a 25-yard heave to Cliff Battles on Brooklyn's 20-yard line and the fromer West Virginia Wesleyan star raced over for the initial score. Early in the final session Pug Rentner intercepted one of Cliff Montgomery's aerials on Boston's 10 and appeared headed for a touchdown until Jack Grossman dropped him on Brooklyn's 34.

Harold McPhail then contacted Flavio Tosi for a first down on Brooklyn's 2-yard line before the fromer slashed through his right tackle for the second Boston touchdown. The Brooklyn score was made by Ralph Kercheval in the second period when he booted a 44-yard placement from about 20 yards in from the sidelines. He had a straight shot from that distance in the final quarter but it was wide by many yards.

Chris Cagle, "Shipwreck" Kelly and Montgomery each tried to get the Dodgers' aerial game going, but the Boston secondaries refused to relax.

Louisville Wins Wins From Rams

Dallas Team Is Unable to Score Against Bourbons.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 2 (AP).—The Louisville Bourbons of the American Professional Football League concluded their home playing season today with a 13-to-0 victory over the Dallas Rams.

A beautiful pass, Lopez to Arial, accounted for the second touchdown, after a 15-yard gain by Scott Boardman, former University of Kentucky back, had put the ball in scoring position. Cavosie's drop kick was wide.

Weather on Parade At Big Service Game

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2 (Spl.).—There was so much drama, tension, interest and excitement in the Army-Navy game at Franklin Field last Saturday that there was but little time and space to tell of the amazing color of he spectacle. Wind and weather and nature set the scene. Of all the Army-Navy games I have seen this was by far the most beautiful and the most awesome. Almost every mood of nature was reflected before the afternoon was over. There were sunshine and rain and a roaring windstorm, and there were those curious half lights and mock twilights that alternatingly illuminated and changed the scenes and colorings inside the gigantic fortress of the field.

There was one weird moment of flatness such as I have never seen before, in which, due to the way the light struck from the storm overhead, and the mud that covered the football men from head to toe and rendered them all an even, khostly grey, the whole scene resembled nothing so much as a pohtographic negative. Everything was inverted. Blacks were white, whites were blacks, and the gray men running on the field shining with mud and water looked like the negative film one sees run through in the cutting rooms of the newsreel studios.

Crowd Plays Trick.

But the prettiest trick of all was played by the crowd shortly before the start of the game when the sun was blotted out by black clouds that came whirling down out of the west, forerunners and messengers of a cloud-burst. With the first slanting dash of rain the massed thousands on the sides of the stadium turned themselves into a tapestry woven of colors as the women donned their colored rain capes against the downpour. Powder and marine blues were the prevailing colors, with sprinklings of reds, greens, yellows and whites. The west stand, whose bleacher sides rise less steeply than the north and south fortress walls, resembled a tulip bed in Holland in springtime. The colors were so clear and sharp and well defined.

Sunlight is not the best friend to true colors, but rather that gray half-light that turned the gigantic football stadium into a bastille, a bastille whose high, ominous sides appeared to be covered with flowers. There were so many beautiful sights that day that it left one breathless as one miracle after the other unfolded. There was that storm-tortured sky to the west seen over the grim ramparts of the stadium, with three ships flying formation against the black, billowing clouds, while to the east the sun still sent slanting rays to the earth and illuminated the massed throngs in the east stand like a stage set lit by spotlights from the balcony. There were all the phenomena of light as the storm drew its dark mantle across the sky, and there was, too, that moment after the game was over whe nthe corps of Midshipmen swormed across the field to serenade the Cadet Corps, which, obeying the ancient etiquette of the game, remained seated solidly in the stands.

A Patch of Daisies.

It was then growing dusk. The east was still dark with the passage of the rain, but the west had brightened and broken. If one half-closed one's eyes and looked down one saw an immense, nodding patch of daisies growing beneath an old slate wall. These were the white spots of the caps of the Midshipmen grouped beneath the gray-clad West Point Corps.

Football in the mud is a much more fluid and rhythmic game to watch than on a dry field because the patterns that are begun by the evolutions and intentions of the 22 men do not come to a stop as abruptly as they do where the turf is solid and sure. The pile-ups dissolve in the grease and the ball carriers move to some sort of completion, either forward or backward, depending upon how hard they are hit until they skid gently to a stop. Blockers, too, sent through to take out the secondary, instead of falling in a heap as they missed would slide gracefully on their chests for 5 and 6 yards at a clip like streamers thrown uot from the central mass. But it must have been profoundly uncomfortable for the players. One more startling note of color: at the end of one of the plays a Navy man arose and walked toward the sidelines. He was gray from head to foot; his helmet, his face, his jersey, pants and legs were veiled in mud. But he held his left hand out to the sidelines as he neared the bench and that hand was pure bright red as though he heli in it a piece of colored paper. It was blood.

I close the season a disillusioned and discredited prophet, far down in the standings of the prognosticators. But one cherished prediction came through for which I am willing to cry quits and receipted in full. Tulane beat Louisiana State. The football has a funny shape. So apparently has the skull of Ko-Ko Long, the lord high executioner of Louisiana. Tsk, tsk, tsk! Offff with their heads, Ko-Ko.

Pirate Pros Down College All-Stars

Pittsburgh, Dec. 2 (AP).—Fighting for their jobs, rather than alma mater, Pittsburgh's football Pirates today downed a scrappy college all-star team, 20 to 7, in a charity game.

The more than 18,000 fans were on their feet much of the time as the pros made 12 first downs to 9 for the collegians and gained 106 yards from scrimmage to 102 for the college boys. The Pirates scored touchdowns in each of the first three periods and the all-stars, who threatened half a dozen times, got their single tally in the final period.

Shuler Named Captain of '35 Army Team

WEST POINT, N. Y., Dec. 2 (AP).—Cadet William R. Shuler, of El Monte, Calif., was unanimously elected captain of the Army Football Team for the 1935 season as the squad returned from its 3-0 defeat at the hands of the Navy at Philadelphia. He succeeds Joseph C. Stancook.

Shuler, a third-string tackle a year ago, was shifted to end this year and became one of he outstanding wingmen in the East. He was given honorable mention in the picking of the Associated Press all-American eam.

The choice of Shuler was made known when the squad reached here and was met by the Cadet Corps, who pulled the players up the hill on the old stage according to tradition. Stancock, Shuler and Coach Gar Davidson rode together on the driver's seat, indicating that Shuler had been picked for the captaincy.

Baltimoreans Top District Booters

S. Elizabeth Noses Out German Team, 3-2.

St. Elizabeth, of Baltimore, won a hard-fought battle from the German-American Club, 3 to 2, in the Southeastern Soccer League yesterday on Benning Field.

The Baltimoreans held a 2-to-0 lead at half time, although the German stars, Jess Burton and Randy Mitchell, broke up the pass work of the Saints time and again. All scores were made from a mix-up in front of goals.

In the second half the Germans came back strong, keeping the ball in the Baltimore territory most of the period. Heleine scored two goals for the Saints, while Johnson made the third. Sienute and Blanche were the scorers for German-Americans.

Wolverines Win.

Wolverines walloped the Merrick Boys' Club, 26-0, yesterday to win the 100-pound championship in the Columbian Football League. The winners scored in every quarter. Layer, with two; Howe and Burns did the scoring for the Wolverines.

Softening?

Indications Are Sopwith May Return in 1936.

LONDON, Dec. 2 (AP).—Indications are that Tom Sopwith is beginning to feel a little better about the "raw deal" he thinks his Endeavor got in the America's Clup races this summer.

If he continues to mellow at the present rate, it is a two-to-one bet the Endeavour will be back at ewport by 1936 for another try at the elusive mug.

"We think perhaps that we have had a bit of a raw deal," Sopwith said at a banquet," but that was mixed up with very technical matters. The Americans no doubt think they were right, and so do we.

"We are trying to keep the door open. It is not very wide open at present, but there is a chink of light, and I think it has stopped closing."

Three League Titles Go to Gehrig

Leads in Hitting, Homers, Total Bases; Werber 'Theft' Champion.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2 (AP). — Lou Gehrig, major league baseball's current "iron man," holder of the big-time record for service in consecutive games at 1,504, crashed his way to his first American League batting championship, the official figures reveal tonight

Gehrig, who kept on hitting all kinds of pitching even after his team, New York's Yankees, faded before the title drive of the Detroit Tigers, finished with a mark of .363. Not content with that, he won the home run title with 49 round-trip blows, leading the 1933 champion in batting and homers, Jimmy Foxx of the Athletics, by five.

Leads in Total Bases.

He also topped the league with 409 in total bases, pounding out 115 singles, 40 doubles and six triples in addition to his home runs. He landed third to Charley Gehringer, second baseman and sparkplug of the Tigers, in scoring, and second in number of hits. Gehringer scored 134 runs, Bill Werber, of Boston, had 129, while Gehrig crossed hostile plates 128 times. Gehringer's hit output was 214, four more than Gehrig produced.

Werber displaced Ben Chapman, of the Yankees, as high man in base-stealing with 40 thefts. Jo-Jo White, another Tiger, finished second to Werber with 28, and Chapman took third place at 26. Hank Greenberg, Detroit's first baseman, rattled off 63 doubles for an individual leadership, and Chapman came up with 13 triples, to lead that department. George (Mule) Haas, of Chicago, was far out in front in sacrifices, laying down his "life" 24 times to advance base runners.

Gehringer Second.

Runner-up to Gehrig in batting, with a mark of .356, his best average, came Gehringer. Heinie Manush, of Washington, a former title winner who led the league a good share o fthe season, but was handicapped by an injury during the last two months, wound up in third place with .349. Al Simmons, who led the circuit twice while with the Aehletics, hit .344 for the White Sox and landed fourth position.

Joe Vosmik, of Cleveland, followed Simmons with .341, 2 points better than Greenberg's mark. Foxx, the 1933 champions, was seventh at .334. Hal Trosky, Cleveland's slugging young first baseman, had a mark of .330, the same as Michael (Pinky) Higgins, of the Athletics. Sam West, of the St. Louis Browns, also handicapped by injuries, rounded out the "Big Ten" with .226.

Tigers Bat .300.

The champion Tigers won the team hitting honors. They had a club average of .300, and led in six other phases of offense—scored 958 runs, collecting 2,321 in total bases from 1,644 hits. They batted in a total of 872 runs, had 124 stolen bases and headed the list with 349 doubles.

The Yankees held all opposition to the lowest run total, 669; the A's had 144 homers, while Washington and Boston collected 70 triples each.

Memphis Defeats Charlotte, 13 to 0

Give Brilliant Exhibition After Slow Start.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 2 (AP).—After getting off to a slow start, the Memphis combined a brilliant running attack and sure-footed kicking here today to down the Charlotte eleven, 13 to 0, in an American Football League game.

Few Melees Are Left on Schedule

NEW YORK, Dec. 2 (AP).—The great stadia of the land were filled with ghosts and hollow echoes today, and all that was left of importance to another football season, one of the greatest in the history of the game, was the final New Year's Day climax between Stanford and Alabama in the Rose Bowl.

Navy men could lift their heads again wherever Uncle Sam's battle wagons roamed the seas, for the breeding ground for officers at Annapolis, the Naval Academy, had broken the 13-year domination of Army's cadets with a 3-to-0 victory before 80,000 storm-tossed spectators at Philadelphia, thanks to big Slade Cutter's 19-yard field goal in the first period.

Tulane Ties for Title.

Tulane's Green Wave, conqueror of Senator Huey Long's widely ballyhooed Louisiana State eleven, 13 to 12, ruled the Southeastern Conference with undefeated Alabama as that campaign came to a close. Rice, recovered from Texas Christian's unexpected uprising, wound up as the Southwestern Conference champion just the same by blasting Baylor in the final duel, 32 to 0, as the Horned Frogs failed against Southern Methodist, 19 to 0.

All over the land, the husky young men who have been warring for alma mater and glory since the early days of September, packed away their moleskins, broke training, beamed on their trophies, or nursed their hurts.

Lion's Share to Gophers.

To Minnesota's great Gophers, unbeaten and untied, went the lion's share of the honors, general recognition as the outstanding football team of the season, though barred by the Big Ten Conference they champion from adding to their claims against Stanford in the Rose Bowl. As an adde dmeasure of satisfaction, there was the Associated Press all-American first team rating for two of Minnesota's greatest stars, Pug Lund and Frank Larsen, and a place on the second team for Bill Bevan.

Pittsburgh, beaten only by Minnesota and the only eleven to give Bernie Bierman's Swedes a real battle, was generally rated the best the East afforded, particularly after Colgate's tremendous difficulties in downing much-trounced Brown Thanksgivin Day 20 to 13, while Pitt was slaughtering Carnegie Tech in the Panther season final. Yale, Big Three champion, was as tough as any when the bell rang for the elis a week ago.

Crown Won by W. & L.

Thanksgiving Day, bringing many teams to the end of the trail Thursday, likewise brought the Big Six title to Kansas State in victory over Nebraska, the Southern Conference championship to Washington and Lee, doomed Temple's Rose Bowl hopes in a scoreless tie with Bucknell, and tied the Rocky Mountain Conference into a three-way knot with Colorado University, Colorado Teachers and Colorado Aggies all even at the end.

Alabama's thrashing of Vanderbilt Thursday won Rose Bowl reognition for the South again, but the outstanding sensation of the week was Navy's magnificient victory over the Cadets in the raindrenched swamp of Franklin Field. Not even footing as treacherous as a revolving glass turntable could halt Fred "Buzz" Borries, all-American half back from Louisville, nor could a mud-plastered ball keep Cutter, playing the greatest game of his career at tackle, from booming home the shot that echoed around the service world.

Bill Shepherd on Top.

Overshadowed by the momentous doings in Philadelphia, but far more important to one individual, were the 13 points Bill Shepherd scored against Georgetown to win the National individual scoring championship with 133 points in nine games. Johnny Oravec, of Willamette, on the other side of the country, finished second with 120, but he gained a seasonal championship of some kind when he scored seven touchdowns against Whitman Thanksgiving Day.

Wetroit won yesterday's outstanding intersection clash, beating Washington State, 6 to 0, and Holy Cross saved something from a wretched season beating Boston College, 7 to 2. Southern California lost, 14 to 7, to Washington, its fifth defeat in ten games, the worst season Howard Jones has had on the coast. The Trojans have one more chance against Notre Dame Saturday.

Georgia Beats Tech.

The South wound up its loose ends with Florida beating Stetson, 14 to 0, Georgia nosing out Georgia Tech, 7 to 0, Duke swamping North Carolina State, 32 to 0, and Mississippi edging out Mississippi State, 7 to 3.

In addition to the Notre Dame-Southern California match in Los Angeles, the Southwest Conference sends out Southern Methodist to play Washington University at St. Louis in final intersectional combat, while Texas Christian meets Santa Clara at Fort Worth and Texas A. and M. entertains Michigan State at San Antonio. The only other game is the closing Southeastern Conference between L. S. U. and Tennessee at Knoxville.

Hughes, Confident of Winning D. C. Title Eventually, Meets Sherman Tonight

Spurned Bid Of $1,000 For Trip

Let Comrade Wilson Go to Australia; Wants Bout With Furr.

FRANKIE HUGHES, the Wisconsin welterweight who battles Morrie Sherman, of Chicago, in the ten-round main bout at the Riding and Hunt Club tonight, passed up a chance of making a certain $1,000 for the opportunity of reaching the top in Washington.

Hughes originally was intended to make the trip to Australia, now being made by his stable mate, Bob Wilson. When the proposition first was broached to him, Hughes was overjoyed at the prospect of making the $1,000 guaranteed for his first fight on the trip, but upon due deliberation, he decided against it.

"I figure the best welterweights in Washington are myself and Bob Wilson," he informed Al Lippe, nationally-known fistic figure who arranged the trip. "One of us is bound to take Phil Furr, if he will meet us, and then we'll be in a predicament. Being stable mates, we can't fight each other, and we'll come to a standstill."

Already Beaten Wilson.

"Furr already has beaten Wilson—and having had a sample of his left hooks I don't think he'd ever consent to a rematch with Bob. He'll have to fight me if I stay here. So let Bob go to Australia, and I'll stay here and keep the home fires burning."

Lippe saw the logic of Hughes' reasoning and consented to take Wilson on the trip, although he was lacking in the national recognition that had been achieved by Hughes.

Sherman earned the right to meet Hughes by soundly trouncing Tony Dominguez in his debut here. Dominguez generally is rated among the best of his weight division now campaigning in the Capital.

In better condition than when he appeared against Domnguez, Sherman arrived from New York last night confident he would have no trouble besting Hughes.

Wants to Meet Furr.

"I want a crack at this Furr," he said. "I think I can beat him because I've beaten better fighters than he ever saw. I gues if I'm good enough to beat Eddie Kid Wolfe and fetllows of that caliber, I can take Furr."

Norment Quarles, who received his baptism of gloves as a lightweight on the University of North Carolina boxing squal, drew a new opponent for his eight-round semi-final. Quarles originally was scheduled to box Pete Galiano, but Galiano decided at the last moment that discretion was the better part of valor and withdrew from the match His place against Quarles will be taken by Calvin Calp, former South Atlantic featherweight champion, who has held Galiano to a draw.

A special six-rounder and two fours will round out the program.

POST PREDICTIONS.

Bouts are rated from A (excellent) to G (very bad).

MAIN EVENT—Morrie Sherman, Chicago, vs. Frankie Hughes, Wisconsin, welterweights; 10 rounds. Rated B. Sherman should prove too fast and clever for the willing but not-too-speedy Hughes.

SEMIFINAL—Norment Quarles, North Carolina, vs. Calvin Calp, Baltimore, lightweights; 8 rounds. Rated B. This one draws B rating only because it gives the Washington public a chance to see in action the "wonder boy" of collegiate boxing, who three times defeated Bobby Goldstein. Quarles' left hook should stop Calp before the fifth round.

PRELIMINARIES—Sid Silas, New York, vs. Tommy Bashara, Norfolk, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Bashara should prove too rugged for Silas.

Equipoise Stabled On Kentucky Farm

Lexington, Ky., Dec. 2 (AP).—Equipoise was stabled at the Whitney Farm near here today, presumably continuing training for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap. Ekky arrived yesterday from the East. This somewhat surprised turfmen here, as he has been pointed for the February 23 race. Advertisements that Equipoise will stand in the Whitney stud at $1,500 have led to a belief he will be returned here and retired after the California event.

At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

Dear Al: (Fair Grounds Selections).

Well, all I can say is that I didn't have a loser at Charles Town last Saturday. The circumstances that led to the postponing of the West Virginia meeting brings to mind the statement of a track official who was looking over the course for the first time last winter. He remarked that, due to the fact that the track was built much higher than the ground around it, there should be plenty of drainage. He was right Saturday. There was plenty of drainage. In fact, the Jockey Club saw the track being drained right from between the two rails. It was a tough break for the creditors, who are now in charge. Hardly enough rain to fill the hollow of your hand fell in Jefferson County for almost a month preceding the downpours of the past week. Thursday is the day set for the opening and we shall see what we shall see Thursday. In the meanwhile, the boss wants some action so I will do my best at New Orleans. BILL.

First race—Brookhattan is a plater with a bit of class. Has been entered and scratched several times while awaiting a spot. May start us off with a good mutuel. Pent House should be popular with the selectors on that Illinois record. Howecer, he is on the outside of the field and I'm sticking to the first-named. Thistle Dick is an inconsistent sort, but might awake for a money appearance.

Second race—Benediction, second four times in her last seven races, appears well placed here. The daughter of Tall Timbers will have Brilliant Miss to beat. Gretna B. and Bunty Ann are possible surprises in the field.

Third race—Polly Diskin would be a standout here were she assigned lighter weight. However, she shapes up fairly well and I'm going to string along. Skirl and Gold Tip are fit and ready nad may have something to say regarding this purse distribution.

Fourth race—Northern Sir ran a sprint race the other day to tune up for this effort. Meets a rather ordinary lot here and a flash of that Texas form would decide this issue. Should the track by muddy, Hamilton would move on top. Lefiore for the show end.

Fifth race—Broadstep moves up a peg after turning in a brilliant effort that seems to point to a return to best form. This one may surprise Betty Farnell and Fitkin, the pair that figure highest in the cold dope.

Sixth race—Shirley B. is a rather honest sort and deserves a chance to get home ahead of this company. Meets good horses in Royal Purchase, Polly Folly and Dusky Lass, but I believe she can turn the trick. Bokie B. pops up in the entries and has a fighting chance to get in the money despite a bad break in the weights.

Seventh race—Nisia turned the trick last out, coming from far out of contention to score a smashing victory. Seldom runs two alike, but I'm forced to string along. Bourbon Prince and Baritone for the place and show awards.

Portsmouth Team Invited to Florida

Would Meet Jacksonville Eleven on Jan. 1.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 2 (AP).—Woodrow Wilson High School of Portsmouth, Va., has been invited to play in a New Year's Day football game here with Andrew Jackson High of Jacksonville.

The game will be played for charity under the auspices of the local Kiwanis Club which annually sponsors such a post-season contest. Jackson is undefeated and this season won the Big Ten High School Conference Championship in the State.

Kiwanis Club officials could not be located tonight to comment on what difference, if any, it would make on the status of the invitation since Wilson was defeated unexpectedly to lose the State championship of Virginia.

Athletes' Ills Are Blamed on Improper Diet

By Bill McCormick.

"IT CERTAINLY does beat all," grumbled Dr. Frank Shyne, poking an inquisitive finger into the washboard muscles which formed a corrugated covering for the stomach of the second or third leading contender for the heavyweight boxing championship. "I never knew it to fail, and it beats all."

"What beats all, Doc?" bleated the contender querulously as the good doctor thumped him a particularly resounding thump under the short ribs. "Ouch! That feels good, but what beats all?"

"The way you athletes abuse your stomachs," explained Washington's leading administerer to athletes, turning the heavyweight over with a deft flip and running an inquiring hand down his spine. "You fellows seem to think if you get plenty of exercise and keep your muscles hard, that's all you need to enjoy perfect health."

Cites Diet Evils.

Whereupon the doctor launched into a detailed explanation of the evils of improper diet, particularly as applied to athletes.

"Improper eating creates an acid condition," he expounded, after a detailed explanation of the difference between proper and improper eating. "Now an acid condition is bad enough with an ordinary individual—with an athletic it's disastrous. The athlete injures a joint, and the acid condition settles there. Then you have rheumatism, arthritis, neuritis or some other kind of itis which spells trouble.

"I don't know of a dozen athletes who eat properly. Even those at the training table cheat a lot usually. Baseball players are the worst offenders. That's why so many pitchers' arms go bad—nothing in the world but trouble in their pitching mechanism created by an acid condition."

Fairly Good Order.

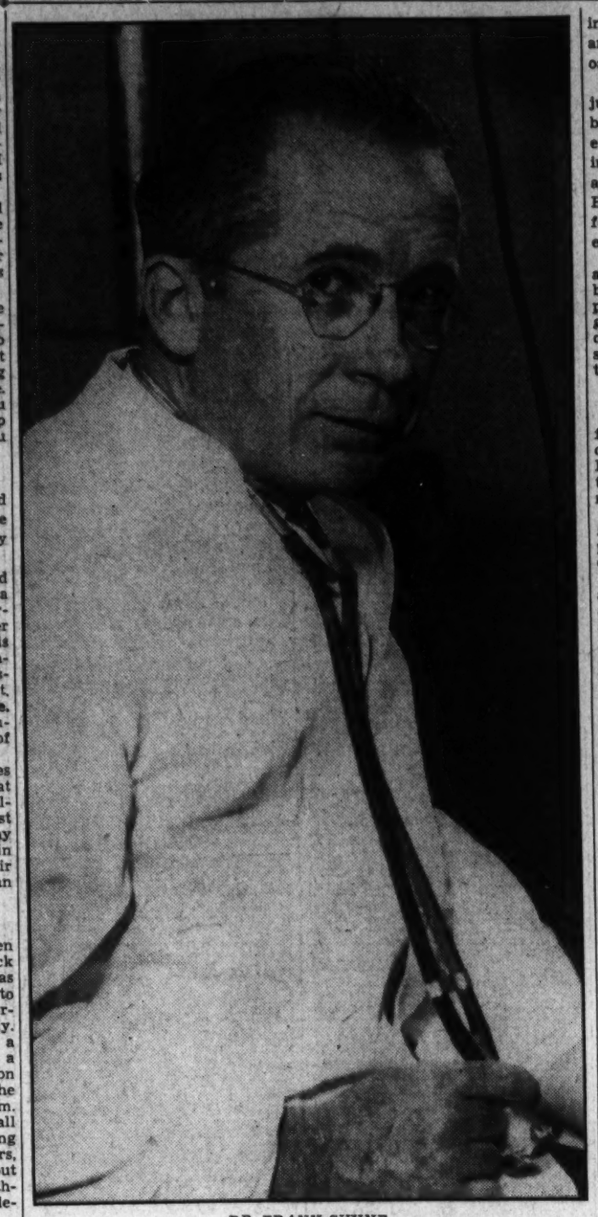
The heavyweight, having been thumped, prodded and snapped back into fairly good working order, was dismissed with the admonition to return for another treatment tomorrow and to watch his diet carefully.

"He's probably going out to eat a couple of hunks of pie a la mode, a rare steak and a handful of bon bons," Dr. Shyne predicted as the pugilist closed the door behind him.

Dr. Shyne, who has treated all types of athletes from ping-pong players to heavyweight wrestlers, then gave forth his own ideas about the value of various types of athletics as body builders—and destroyers.

To him, wrestling and football are the two sports which inflict the most damage to the human anatomy.

"In both these sports joints are strained, ligaments are twisted. If proper attention is given immediately, there is no lasting effect. If not, serious complications may arise. Boxing is the most bruising sport, but there is very little of the straining of the body that makes football and wrestling such punishing propositions."



DR. FRANK SHYNE.

Football players usually are injured in the shoulders. Wrestlers, bounced about as they are in their exhibitions, are twisted out of shape in practically every portion of their anatomy at one time or another. Baseball players usually suffer from foot ailments—or the almost inevitable stomach disorders.

Having played football with Syracuse, having played amateur baseball, having wrestled, boxed, rowed, played tennis, golf and even the grueling Cuban game of jai-alai during his lifetime, Dr. Shyne should be well qualified to speak on the most strenuous sport.

Badminton Strenuous.

"You won't believe me," he confesses, "but I think the new game of badminton is the most strenuous. Next to that I'd rank handball, although tennis and basket ball are no sissy sports, either."

Athletes never should retire to sedentary lives after their competitive careers are finished, is the opinion of the doctor.

"They enlarge their hearts by active competition, then sit down at a desk for the rest of their lives and wonder what's the matter with them. They should keep playing, in moderation, some game that is not too strenuous—always tapering off with the years.

"In fact, that goes for everyone, whether he's been an athlete or not. But, the watchword should be 'moderation.' There is nothing more foolish than these old bucks who think if they gallop about the golf course for 36 or 54 or even 72 holes a day, they are keeping in condition. They're not keeping in condition, they're killing themselves.

Walking and Golf.

"Walking and golf are the most perfect exercises for those past 35. Walking hardly can be overdone, unless carried to the point of exhaustion, but golf can. And everyone who plays golf past his thirties should first know the condition of his heart. There is a tremendous tension created in the back swing, which applies directly to the heart.

"Several times I have been called in on the golf course to treat men past middle age who have collapsed on the links. In two of these cases the men have been dead from heart failure when I reached them. They were not a pretty sight—and nither is the picture of a once healthy body inflated or shrivelled by sedentary living after middle age. So, let that be a warning to you."

Eleven Teams Enter Court League

Women's Recreation Basket Ball League Is Formed Here.

ELEVEN teams are entered in the Women's Recreation Basket League, sponsored by the Department of Playgrounds, which opens play tomorrow night, when the Garfield A. C. meets a team from the business women's department of the Y. W. C. A., at Hine gymnasium, at 8:30.

The tournament will be played off in the round-robin fashion, teams being divided into two sections. Sectionaal winners will compete in a three-game play-off for the league title.

The executive committee s composed of representatives of each team, with Miss Maude N. Parker, director of women and girls' activities, as chairman. Members of the committee are Mrs. Anna Honabach, Als. A. C.; Miss Betty Kronman, Jewish Community Center; Miss Emily Harrington, Typewriters; Miss Loveye Adkins, Garfield A. C.; Miss Frances Winter, Department of Agriculture; Miss Agnes Hough, St. Rita's; Miss Jeanette Adamson, Takoma; Miss Emily Tilton, Park View; Mrs. Katherine Dulin, Sherwood; Miss Janet Rock, Red Flashes; and Miss Edith Reeger, Y. W. C. A.

Mrs. Abbie Flynn, Department of Playgrounds, is vice chairman, and Dr. Phillip Degnan, of the Gallinger Hospital staff, is cooperating with the league in giving physical examinations to players.

County Board To Name Head

Frank R. Beard Has Edge for Post; Simon Downey Also Is Mentioned.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—With Frank R. Beard, sr., Republican, the only county commissioner reelected, having the edge for the presidency, the recently elected Board of County Commissioners for Washington County will meet for the first time Tuesday and organize. Only one member, Simon L. Downey, has been mentioned for the presidency.

There is some speculation as to whether an assistant clerk will be named by the board in view of promises made that this office, created four years ago, would be abolished.

The board also will name an attorney, with eight in the field for the post. Other appointments will be made as terms of Bellevue trustees, inspector of weights and constables expire.

The board is Republican, four being of that party and the fifth a Democrat.

Jury Calls Sent For Labor Trials

25 Summoned to Appear for W. Va. Cases.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Dec. 2 (Spl.).—Twenty-five additional petit jurors have been summoned to report Tuesday morning when cases of several men recently indicted for felonies and misdemeanors growing out of labor troubles here are scheduled to go to trial.

Villa, having formed a limited partnership pursuant to the laws of the State of New York, and desiring to do business in the District of Columbia as a limited partnership, have this day filed a certificate of limited partnership in the office of the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; that the firm name of said partnership is G. M.-P. Murphy & Company; that the business intended to be transacted by said partnership is buying or otherwise acquiring, selling or otherwise disposing of, and in any manner dealing, whether on behalf of the copartnership or for others, in stocks, bonds or other securities and property, transacting a general securities and brokerage business such as is ordinarily conducted by New York Stock Exchange firms, conforming to the constitution and rules of the said New York Stock Exchange, and underwriting or subscribing for, or assisting to procure underwritings or subscriptions for stocks, bonds or other securities and/or otherwise financing or assisting to procure the financing of corporate enterprises; that the names of the said Grayson M.-P. Murphy, Otis A. Glazebrook, jr., P. Erskine Wood, Edward G. McDonnell, John G. Pennypacker, James D. Sawyer, Charles S. Sargent, William P. T. Preston, J. S. Wilson, jr., Charles H. Baetjer, Don M. Kelley are general partners, that the said Frederick Osborn and Alfonso P. Villa are special partners; that the said special partners have contributed as capital to the common stock of said partnership, the following amounts, in cash, namely: Frederick Osborn, $42,500.00, and Alfonso P. Villa, $357,500.00, and have also made additional contributions of capital to said common stock consisting in each case of cash, securities and/or other property having the actual and agreed value hereinafter specified, to wit: Frederick Osborn, $112,500.00, and Alfonso P. Villa, $42,500.00; and that the term for which the said partnership is to exist commenced on October 25, 1934, and is to end at the close of business on June 30, 1935, subject to earlier termination at the option of any partner, in the event of a material breach of the articles of copartnership. Dated this 30th day of November, 1934. (Signed) Grayson M.-P. Murphy, Otis A. Glazebrook, jr., P. Erskine Wood, Edward G. McDonnell, John G. Pennypacker, James D. Sawyer, Charles S. Sargent, William P. T. Preston, J. S. Wilson, jr., Charles H. Baetjer, Don M. Kelley, Frederick Osborn and Alfonso P. Villa.

Walt Mason

Built That Way.

Bill Jinx is energetic, he always does his best; he seems to me pathetic, because he can not rest. He must be up and doing from morning until night, some futile task pursuing, for work is his delight. He's always busy scanning the jobs he has in view; he's always busy planning the work he has to do. When eventide encroaches upon the wornout day, old William Jinx approaches, and has some things to say. "Tomorrow I'll be mixing some concrete for the walks, tomorrow I'll be fixing the hinges and the locks; tomorrow I'll be sawing some seven cords of elm, for winter's nearer drawing, when tempests overwhelm." And always he is speaking of work he has in hand, and always he is streaking around to beat the band. I sometimes say to Willie, "I wish you'd soak your head; it seems to me so silly, this planning work ahead. You interrupt my reading, you spoil the pleasant eve, you keep my bosom bleeding, you make me pine and grieve. Why not sit in that rocker, and rest yourself a while, and read a shilling shocker that treats of human guile? You always talk of service, of labor and of toil, and make me so blamed nervous my blood begins to boil." "I sometimes think you're crazy," says Bill, in tones that ring; "you are so beastly lazy you never do a thing. Oh, labor has its glories that you will never know; you sit there reading stories not worth two cents a throw."

APPLE MARY — By Martha Orr

INVESTING DENNIE'S $500 IN JOE'S NEW STORE SEEMED TO BE THE SUREST WAY OF GETTING THE MONEY NECESSARY FOR DENNIE'S TRIP TO WESTCHESTER CLINIC- BUT FATE STEPPED IN—GRAN'MA, FREDDIE HARDIE, TOLD ME JOE'S STORE BURNED UP! DOES THAT MEAN WE LOST ALL TH' MONEY WE GAVE HIM?
COURSE NOT, DENNIE! THERE WAS A FIRE, BUT NOT MUCH OF A ONE!
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.; Copyright, 1934, by Publishers Syndicate
WELL, APPLE MARY, I JUST CAME IN T'SEE HOW YOU FEEL AFTER TH' FIRE LAST NIGHT. I TOLD YOU NOT TO INVEST YOUR MONEY IN JOE'S STORE!
IT'LL ALL BE COVERED BY INSURANCE, MRS. HARDIE!
ARE YOU SURE? I DIDN'T THINK JOE HAD TIME TO TAKE IT OUT YET. HAVE YOU SEEN HIM?
NO-O, I WENT OVER LAS' NIGHT, BUT COULDN'T FIND HIM.
GRAN'MA, S'POSE THERE ISN'T ANY INSURANCE, WHAT WILL YOU DO THEN?
